Senate Units Set to Act On Subsidies And Tax Bill

Administration Defeat Forecast; Labor, Other Groups Assail Levy Plan

By Don Cook
New York Tribune, Inc.

With the congressional revolt against the economic policies of the Roosevelt Administration at its height, Senate committee action begins this week on two of the most controversial issues involved—the taxation program and price-control subsidies.

Both issues have been disposed of in the House with the defeat of the Administration. Except for a revival last night of hopes for a compromise on the antisubsidy bill, it appeared likely that House action in both cases will be upheld in the Senate.

The Senate Finance Committee expects to hear today from Henry Morgenthau, jr., Secretary of the Treasury, a second presentation of the Administration's case for a tax bill to raise approximately ten billion dollars in additional revenue. The committee has under consideration a House Ways and Means Committee version of the bill which rejected all Treasury proposals, and will produce $2,140,000,000 in new taxes instead. Senator Walter F. George of Georgia, chairman, last night served notice again that it is unlikely that much more will be added to the measure by his Senate group.

Labor Exerts Pressure

Meanwhile, organized labor and other organizations renewed pressure on Congress last night for enactment of a revenue measure which would represent more closely the ideas of the Administration. Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, called the bill as it now stands "an inflation breeder" and a blow to national morale.

In a statement in which the CIO was joined by the National Lawyers Guild, the National Farmers Union, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Women's Trade Union League, the League of Women Shoppers and the Consumers' Union, an increase in the corporate tax rate from 40 to at least 50 per cent was proposed.

The tax bill, as it now stands, the statement said, "would perpetuate the oppressive burden of the victory tax on nine million hard-pressed families." Labor groups also will seek to have the Finance Committee strike from the revenue measure a provision which requires unions and other tax-exempt organizations to file income tax returns.

Five-Point Recommendation

Protesting that the bill eliminates the earned income credit which "favors those who toil rather than those who hold investments," the coalition recommended as revenue raisers:

1. Increased personal income taxes on income above $3000 a year and a $25,000 ceiling on net in-

President Is Due To Be Dunned On Debt of $1.10

Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., Nov. 28 (AP).—Maj. Virgil E. McDaniel says President Roosevelt owes him 55 francs ($1.10) and next time the major is in Washington he plans to collect.

McDaniel was in charge of preparing well-guarded housing for the Roosevelt-Churchill conference at Casablanca and remained there during the President's stay.

"The President broke a lens in his spectacles," McDaniel relates "and sent me out to get them repaired. I paid 55 francs for the job and some day when I'm passing through Washington, I'm going to get my $1.10 back from the Chief. He forgot to pay me."

Phil-Pitts Trim Redskins, 27-14; Bears Clinch Title

The Phil-Pitt Eagles smashed through the Redskin line for three touchdowns and blocked a Sammy Baugh punt to make way for a fourth as they drubbed the 'Skins, 27-14, yesterday before 35,540 fans in Griffith Stadium. The defeat was the first for the Redskins in 17 league games and they met up with a delay in clinching the Eastern Division title as the New York Giants beat the Dodgers, 24-7. Both the Eagles and Giants remain mathematically in the race.

The Chicago Bears clinched the Western Division title but it took a hot hand by Sid Luckman in the last period to brush aside the unexpected challenge of the Chicago Cardinals, 35-24. Luckman threw four touchdown passes for a new season's record of 28.

Hitler's Ace Diplomat

Von Papen Figures in Rumor Of Peace Dickering at Vatican

Stockholm, Sweden, Nov. 28 (AP).—The person of Franz von Papen, ace contact man in Adolf Hitler's entourage of diplomats, cropped up in a world-wide circuit of rumors of peace negotiations today.

The Bern correspondent of Aftonbladet said a high German personage visited the Vatican on November 26, and that it might be presumed to be the Catholic, Von Papen, the German Ambassador to Turkey.

The dispatch said it was reported in Switzerland Von Papen's recent trip from his embassy at Ankara to Berlin was not connected with Turkish affairs.

The Swiss newspaper, Basler Nachrichten, first reported last Thursday in a dispatch from the Swiss border town of Chiasso that Pope Pius had undertaken a mission of mediation between Germany and the Allies.

No independent confirmation of the report was obtainable from diplomatic or church sources.

For several days, the Swiss correspondent said, the Pope had greatly increased his diplomatic discussions, seeing the German, British, French and American envoys, and many of his most intimate advisers, including Luigi Cardinal Maglione, the Papal Secretary of State, and his two assistants,

Policeman Swaps Shots With Intruder

Private J. G. Beach Catches Suspect In Riggs Road Store

Pvt. James G. Beach, of police scout car 122, was embroiled in a shooting affray with a Negro intruder he is said to have caught in a Safeway Store at Riggs rd. and North Capitol st. late last night.

It could not immediately be determined whether either the police officer or the Negro had been injured, but reports made to police were that there had been at least three shots fired.

The intruder is said to have eluded the officer and made a dash into the nearby wooded area, where other policemen sent to the scene, were attempting to find him.

Later police reports said the man, described as being a dark skinned Negro, weighing 200 pounds, was wanted for assault with a dangerous weapon.

Detective Sergt. E. E. Thompson of headquarters was immediately dispatched to take charge of the search for the man who, at 1:10 a. m. today was reported headed east of the Keene School.

Close behind him were four police cars, their occupants with automatic rifles protruding ready for instant action. Capt. Walter Storm of Precinct No. 12 was summoned from bed to take charge of the chase.

The man sought was reported darting in and out of the wooded section near the Keene School and did not afford police, it was said, much opportunity to trail him.

Beach's partner in the exchange of shots was Pvt. C. H. Gruld.

Americans Rush Work on Airbases In Gilbert Isles

By the Associated Press

Apparently with an eye to an anticipated drive against the Japanese-held Marshalls, American forces are pushing work on airbases in the newly won Gilbert Islands 350 miles distant.

While little information is available here, those familiar with the campaign of Tarawa and other Gilbert Islands undoubtedly was the construction of landing strips and the repair of those built by the Japanese.

The Navy's high speed construction outfit, the Seabees, presumably were at work on these projects even before the last Japanese was exterminated. The Seabees, who go ashore with, or soon after, the first assault wave, already have set records for fast construction of landing strips in recaptured Solomon Islands territory.

WPB to Give 'Secret' Data On War Output

Nelson Announces Release of Data To Help Industry

By Walter Wood

Vital industrial data which has been held as secret war information will be made available in the next few days to American businessmen for postwar planning, Donald M. Nelson, War Production Board chairman, said yesterday.

Declaring that prosecution of the war has reached the point where some of the business restrictions on publication of industrial statistics may safely be removed, Nelson said "our production position is now so strong that information concerning it will be of no aid or comfort to the enemy—quite the contrary."

Past and Current Data

A large amount of past and current data originally collected solely for use of war agencies will be released. The facts will include figures on production, material consumption, inventories and resources, fabricating capacity and utilization, manpower, impending bottlenecks, new materials, substitutions and general trends.

Looking forward to the post war period of conversions, Nelson said "the series of reports eventually will be of value in helping to restore the nation to normal pursuits. It should prove to be a most important step toward the transition to a peacetime economy when the war has ended."

The WPB chairman cautioned, however, that "none should read into the change of policy any implication that the war is as good as won and that industry can now diffuse its thinking and energy in war production. Our effort must not be relaxed in the least."

Correct Inconsistencies

Nelson said the new policy will help to correct some of the inconsistencies and other complications that have arisen from the rigid control kept over industrial information. He cited the anomaly of a manufacturer being unable to learn the total production of his industry, yet frequently reading newspaper reports of how many guns, tanks, planes, ships and munitions were produced last month or year.

The information reports are expected to eliminate duplication on the part of an industry and the WPB in collecting data on the same commodities, and also to clear up misunderstanding and half knowledge of the war effort arising from lack of public information on industrial matters.

First releases, Nelson said, will be issued in a few days and will cover the period from the beginning of wartime restrictions to the

Soldier's Dilemma

Send $10 if It's a Girl and $20 If a Boy, He Said—She Sent $50

Roodhouse, Ill., Nov. 29 (AP).—A 24-year-old American Air Force staff sergeant somewhere in England learned he was a father but he couldn't figure out if it was triplets, quadruplets or quintuplets, or whether his wife got their signals mixed.

Last May, before the soldier, Perry A. Nebergall, was sent overseas, he explained to his wife, Marian, an expectant mother, how they could by-pass the uncertainty of mails, cables and censorship.

"A cabled money order," he said, "will go right through. So—if it's a girl, send me the $10. If it's a boy ... send me the $20."

Time passed.... Marian went to the hospital late in October.

A few days ago, a press release sent to the United States from an Eighth Army Air Force fighter station in England stated that a Thunderbolt crew chief named Perry Nebergall was appealing wildly to his superiors to get some news from home and get it quick.

The sergeant, it said, was muttering somewhat incoherently:

"Triplets—could it be? Two boys and a girl? Or a boy and three girls? Or five girls?"

"It's all very simple," explained Mrs. Nebergall, when advised of her husband's confusion. "It was an 8-pound boy and I cabled him so he'd know everything was all right. But because it was so close to Christmas I made it an even $50 just as a surprise."

Yanks Capture Hill Commanding Road Leading Into Nazi Line

Allied Headquarters, Algiers, Nov. 28 (AP).—United States troops stormed forward two miles northwest of Montaquila in the central sector of Italy and seized mountain heights commanding the secondary road leading westward from Colli Al Volturno through the German winter defense line, Allied headquarters announced today.

This important advance was made on La Falconara Mountain, with clearing weather allowing a renewal of ground activity.

It was disclosed officially that the United States Third Infantry Division is among the troops in Lieut. Gen. Clark's Fifth Army in Italy. The Third Division previously had been a part of the Seventh Army of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr. It was in action in Sicily and before that participated in the American landing in French Morocco November 8, 1942. Earlier it had been announced that the 45th Division, also formerly of the Seventh Army, and the 36th, were in Clark's forces.

On the hard-fought Sangro River front the British Eighth Army, aided by a powerful air offensive and inspired by a personal message from Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery to "drive the Germans north of Rome," extended their vital bridgehead.

Flocks of fighters and bombers staged a day-long offensive against German gun positions and roads. Blasting a way for the Eighth beyond the bridgehead, they pounded positions 2000 to 3000 yards ahead of the British lines.

The German air force was slightly more active on the Eighth Army front, two small formations of ME-109's attacking in the morning and another seen in the central sector in the afternoon.

Strong aerial support also was given the Fifth Army.

Two Forts Lost

The fiercest air battle of the Mediterranean theater in recent weeks was fought by American Flying Fortresses and P-38 Lightning escorts in bombing railway yards and a bridge at the Italian east coast port of Rimini. This force was set upon by 30 to 50 Messerschmitts and Focke-Wulfs.

Fortress gunners blasted down at least seven enemy planes in a 25-minute scrap. Two Fortresses were lost.

In the center of the Eighth Army Front British observers reported fires and demolitions in the villages of Villa Santa Maria and Borrello, both on the southeast side of the Sangro, as well as in other small villages across the stream. These were construed as signifying German intention to withdraw from exposed positions.

The Navy made belated announcement that British destroyers last Tuesday steamed boldly into the Gulf of Gaeta and successfully bombarded enemy positions north of the Garigliano River.

City of 1,000,000 Reduced to 10,000

Russians Say Nazis Massacred 80,000 in Kiev—Mostly Jews

By Jerome Davis

Kiev, Nov. 26—(Delayed)—(INS).—Ancient Kiev, once one of the most beautiful cities of the Soviet Union, is today a metropolis stalked by the specter of death, with its famed university and many other edifices ruined by the blight of war and invasion.

But the greatest destruction Kiev has suffered was not to its buildings, streets and public services, but to the lives of its people. All of its surviving residents who were interviewed—ranking from the humblest to the highest—testified that the Germans had executed inhabitants estimated to number as high as 80,000—the overwhelming majority of them Jewish—in what they described as the worst massacre perpetrated by the Nazis in Russia. Between 60,000 and 70,000 of the victims were declared to be Jewish.

There were many other deaths, too, from bombing, fighting in the streets and hunger.

Before the war Kiev was populated by more than one million persons. When the Germans withdrew, there were only about 10,000 inhabitants left.

When I arrived at Kiev, recently liberated by the Red Army, I discovered the city still was without electricity and water supply. The power plants had been blown up and the water mains destroyed by the retreating Nazis.

In the heart of the city seven blocks of buildings had been destroyed. All first and second-class hotels were gone.

The University of Kiev had been blown up. The Germans had destroyed or removed some of the best specimens from the university's laboratories and anything else they wanted. I was told that the second best collection of butterflies in Russia—some 80,000 specimens—had been carried off to Germany.

From the zoological museum the Germans shipped away the best specimen of a prehistoric dinosaur Russia had, and some of the best specimens of mounted Russian bears.

Some 1,600,000 books were blown up in the destruction of the university library. In the entire city, the Kiev librarian estimated, six million books were lost.

A beautiful marble building which has housed the headquarters of the Central Committee of the Communist Party was systematically torn apart. All its marble and bronze were carfeully taken down and, together with doors and windows, shipped ofl to Germany.

Gone also is the beautiful Uspensky Cathedral. Some of its walls, however, remain, with their priceless frescoes and paintings, standing like a grim sentinel, exposed to the rain and snow amidst a mass

Red Army Nears Main Enemy Line, Recaptures 150 More Villages

London, Monday, Nov. 29 (AP).—Russian armies smashing at Nazi forces fleeing along an escape gap northwest of Gomel swept up 150 villages and many prisoners Sunday, Moscow announced today, and seized some 30 other localities to the west and southwest in drives punching deeper to the Germans' main defense wall in White Russia.

In all, 3800 Nazis were reported killed in blazing actions from the Gomel area to below Dnepropetrovsk, including 800 annihilated in eight futile blows at Red army defenses holding near Brusilov, 40 miles west of Kiev.

The Berlin radio claimed recapture of Korosten, 75 miles northwest of Kiev, in this bloody sector, but Moscow said the Soviet lines held firm in that salient also.

The Germans are mining roads and dynamiting bridges in their retreat northwest of Gomel, Russians said, but pursuing Soviet troops killed 700 Nazis and captured "a considerable number of prisoners."

Rail Point Captured

This surge by Gen. Constantine Rokossovsky's forces seized Buda-Koshelevskaya, on the Gomel-Zhlobin-Minsk railroad nearly 30 miles northwest of Gomel, as the Russians straightened their lines and harried perhaps 300,000 Germans remaining in the Gomel salient.

To the west, a drive along the lower Berezina River enveloped 24 villages and killed 400 Germans, while along the Pripet River the Russians fighting in roadless marshes and woods seized more towns and smashed Nazi counter-assaults, Moscow said.

To the south, the Germans made their eight vain attacks with two infantry regiments and 50 tanks against the Soviet forces near Brusilov, seeking to smash open the way to Kiev.

Soviet Ruse Successful

Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's troops let the tanks through, then mowed down the charging infantry, killing 800 and forcing them to retreat, the war bulletin declared. Soviet artillery and mortars swung upon the German armor, wrecking 24 tanks, four self-propelled guns and four armored carriers, and throwing the remaining tanks back, it added.

Carving deeper into the Dnieper bend, Red army troops broke into German strong points southwest of Kremenchug, wiping out a battalion of Germans and 15 tanks and seized 15 villages southwest of Dnepropetrovsk. In one sector alone, Moscow declared, 1000 Germans died.

Speaking exultantly of the Russian offensives to the north, the Soviet army newspaper Red Star asserted "the mass expulsion of the Germans from White Russia is in progress."

The Moscow communique depicted Russian lines as standing firmly not only at Brusilov, midway between Kiev and Zhitomir, but in

RAF Bombers Again Roar Toward Reich

Planes Drone Over Channel From Dusk to Midnight

London (Monday), Nov. 29 (AP). Massive RAF formations streamed across the Channel toward Germany from dusk to midnight, apparently assigned to open the second week of a methodical aerial blasting of Hitler's Reich, it was disclosed today.

The new thrust came after intimation here that the destruction of a third of Berlin during the last week was accomplished in part by the use of a new-type incendiary bomb and Paul Joseph Goebbels, Nazi propagandist, defiantly cried out against the unloading of "masses of phosphorous cannisters," on the capital.

Coastal observers said the planes started moving early in relatively small forces and were still flying over at regular intervals until midnight. Then a massive stream of outgoing bombers took to the air and were still streaking out 50 minutes later.

London had a brief alert early today, but no gunfire was heard and no incidents were reported.

Berliners, sleep-hungry until Saturday night after five successive nocturnal trips to the air raid shelters as the result of the RAF visits, finally enjoyed a full night's rest, for there were no reports of aerial activity over Germany.

Aerial activity yesterday included

Germans Call Berlin Bombs Invasion Omen

Stockholm, Nov. 28 (AP).—The aerial bombardment of Berlin is regarded by some German military men as part of an Allied plan to crush the nerve center of the Reich as a prelude to invasion of Europe from the west and south, a dispatch to the Allehanda said tonight.

A third of Berlin is already crushed.

At the same time the newspaper Aftontidnigen said that, with Berlin residents facing worse days of hardship after a week of aerial warfare, there were unconfirmed reports that a general evacuation was proposed if the bombardments continued. The Germans are reported convinced the capital will be the target for more heavy assaults.

The correspondent of the Allehanda said that the Germans "await an invasion of the continent" in the wake of the offensive against Berlin.

Neutral correspondents said German officials have despaired of immediately rehabilitating Berlin and likely were already performing the Nation's administrative functions from other places in Germany.

Bomb-dazed Berliners, convinced the decision to level their city was reached at the Moscow conference, expected even greater air-borne destruction soon.

Swedish correspondents telegraphed that Nazi officials will concentrate on restoring the bare services essential to war and factory workers. Food distribution, transportation and water and power facilities are still paralyzed.

Tiergarten Park has been converted into a tent city, where women prepare meals under rugs suspended between trees.

Flats with walls still standing are unlighted, and their occupants

4 Bombs Damage Danish Arms Plant

Stockholm, Monday, Nov. 29 (AP). Four bombs exploded last night in Nazi-occupied Denmark's biggest arms and ammunition factory, the Industrisyndikatet in Hellerup, destroying a workshop, it was learned today.

A Copenhagen machine factory also was damaged by explosives.

Jap Cruiser Probably Sunk Off Solomons

Is 49th Nipponese Warship Blasted In Area This Month

Southwest Pacific Allied Headquarters (Monday), Nov. 29 (AP).—A 1000-pound bomb from a patrolling Liberator pierced the armor of a Japanese light cruiser Friday night and exploded inside in a spectacular display, probably sinking the ship. It was the 49th enemy warship sunk or damaged in the Northern Solomons during November.

The Liberator, on night reconnaissance, sighted the cruiser near St. George Channel, Gen. Douglas MacArthur reported in a communique today.

Despite the heavy explosion, MacArthur did not claim the cruiser's destruction, although a spokesman said there was a bright flash of light.

This action came as the Fifth and Thriteenth Air Forces struck heavily at the enemy in eight widely separated areas of the Southwest Pacific warfront.

200 Sorties Made

Planes of Admiral William F. Halsey had their busiest day since the offensive against Bougainville Island began November 1, making more than 200 sorties in which almost 200 tons of bombs were dropped without a loss. No enemy interception was reported.

Halsey's spokesman reported more than 1000 Japanese were killed by artillery and infantry fire in a 10-day battle on Bougainville which brought the enemy total in dead there from ground action to more than 2000.

American dead and wounded were around 1000. Three hundred of these were killed in an artillery duel.

Buka Airstrip Bombed

Bombers dropped around 300 500-pound bombs on the Buka airstrip at the northern tip of Bougainville and other bombers a few hours later bombed and strafed the 'drome. One enemy plane there was observed to bear a swastika on its tail.

A flight of 50 Mitchells dropped more than 30 tons of bombs on the Bonis airstrip on Buka.

2½ Billions Being Spent to Step Up Air Offensive

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—About $2,500,000,000 is being spent to expand the joint British-American air offensive from Britain, which reached a new peak of destructive intensity only last week, the air ministry news service announced today.

Of the total, about 552 million dollars will be spent on airfields and depots for the United States Eighth Air Force. Only 40 million dollars of the entire expenditure will be borne by the Americans.

The greater part of the material is being provided by the British government. American construction units are supplying the bulk of labor for one airfield and depot out of every seven for the American Air Force.

Thomas Talking

Brewster Probe Out to Smear Labor, UAW Chief Charges

President R. J. Thomas of the CIO-United Automobile Workers yesterday charged that the real objective in the House investigation of slow plane production by the Brewster Aeronautical Corporation has been the "hanging" of the UAW local Brewster union and the "smearing" of the entire labor movement.

The subcommittee, headed by Representative Drewry (Democrat) of Virginia investigated production failures at Brewster earlier this month, taking testimony from Navy officials and representatives of management and labor, including President Tom De Lorenzo, of the local union.

Thomas complained in a letter to Drewry yesterday that he twice was refused a chance to testify and that "your examination of the union spokesmen you choose to hear ... was accompanied throughout by bullying, by threats, by personal abuse and by impunging of motives."

Referring, presumably, to De Lorenzo's admissions before the subcommittee that he had used several aliases and had made false statements on his job application at Brewster, on his Selective Service record and in an income tax report, Thomas said:

"I have no desire to justify Mr. De Lorenzo's answers on certain questionnaires, but I maintain that you did not prove in any way that any of his acts reflected in any way on Mr. De Lorenzo's record as the leader of the Brewster local, or his efforts to maintain production in the Brewster plants."

Thomas also wrote:

"It is obvious that the production deficiencies which prevailed in the Brewster plants can in no way be charaged to local 365-UAM-CIO.

"On the contrary, it appears that production failures were the responsibility of the managements, of the Navy Department itself, which sponsored some of the managements.

"Your committee has sought to arraign the union on the alleged charge that it dictated hiring and blocked the discharge of incompetent employes.

"You sought to convey the impression, before ascertaining the facts, that the local union, or Mr. Delorenzo were exercising some sort of dictatorship that tied the hands of the management and caused it to retain incompetents on the payroll. Members of your committee persisted in this charge although figures furnished you showed that this was clearly not the case."

"Were your committee not intent upon smearing the Brewster local, and, incidentally, the rest of the labor movement, you could find more than sufficient testimony given at the hearings to justify the conclusion that labor was nc

'Glory to Our Corps'

Writer Tells of Bodies Draping Broken Landing Craft at Betio

By John Henry

With U. S. Marines on Betio Island, Tarawa Atoll, Nov. 21 (Delayed) (INS).—Reveille aroused the marines aboard the transports at 2:30 a. m. An hour later the boatswain's mate began speaking through the public address system of the ship.

"Now hear this," he said. "Boat division one and boat division two, proceed to your debarkation stations and debark."

This was the first wave—the men who would plunge into the holocaust of enemy fire—some of whom would bleed and stagger and fall on the jagged coral, never to rise again; some of whom would deliver death to Japan's most rugged troops.

All knew the assignment was tough. But they scrambled down the debarkation nets, tense and gay and anxious for action. Earlier they had heard the ship's chaplain, a Philadelphia jesuit priest, say:

"As your chaplain, let me ask: Are you on the right side of God? My suggestion to you is to pause right now and humbly ask forgiveness for any sins you have committed."

A brief moment of silence ensued.

"All right, now. Go in and bring glory to our corps. God bless you

80,000 Reported Massacred During Nazi Occupation of Kiev

But most of the buildings in the city are intact. The great Sophia Cathedral is undamaged. Undamaged also is the Kiev Opera House.

The Germans entered the city on September 19, 1941. Shortly afterward, the military command posted notices ordering the Jewish populatoin to assemble on September 28 in the Lubiyanoffka district with their valuables and other belongings.

The Jews thought they were going to be deported and so took all their most valuable movable possessions. When they arrived they were arrested and their valuables were taken from them.

During the next few days the Jews were taken to a huge ravine a half-mile long. There, we were told, the Jews were shot.

Machine Gunned in Relays

The Jews were reported placed in relays on a wooden platform and machine gunned. The bodies were buried in a vast hole in the ravine.

The ravine is 60 feet deep with a soil of clayish sand. The entire place appeared to have been freshly dug over. Poking about, I found the grim remains of a woman's arm, with flesh still on it. I also picked up human finger nails and what appeared to be human hair attached to skin.

Above the ravine the ground was stained with dark red patches. I was told these were made by human blood.

I insisted on more evidence. On the second day I visited the spot in the company of the Kiev regional member of the Soviet Government Commission on Atrocities. With us were three Russians who had been war prisoners in German hands and who claimed they had been forced to burn the bodies of the Jews.

The Russians I interviewed in Kiev alleged that before the city was recaptured on November 6, 1943, the Germans tried to obliterate evidences of the mass shooting of the Jews by burning the bodies. Scores of Kiev residents said they had seen large fires and smoke coming from the ravine late in August and in September.

Former Prisoners' Story

One professor of the Kiev University alleged that the smell of the smoke was similar to that of burning bodies.

The story told by the former Russian war prisoners, who claimed they took part in the burning of the bodies, was most dramatic and gruesome. One of them said:

"One hundred of us prisoners were selected by German officers for special work. We were taken to this ravine and ordered to sit down.

"Five prisoners at a time were marched away. We thought that each group was going to be shot, but we heard no shots. When our turn came, our caps were taken away and we were stripped to the waist. Then each of us was shackled so tightly that great sores developed on our legs."

At this point one of the men pulled up his trousers and displayed sores which looked as if they had been made by manacles.

"Soon a truck arrived, carrying spades. We were ordered to dig in the ravine. We did this for several days without finding anything.

"Finally, a new German officer told us to dig at a new spot near the last sand pile. Here we began to find dead bodies.

"The hole containing the bodies was approximately 13 feet deep, 65 long and 50 wide. We were ordered to place the bodies in piles —first a layer of wood, then a layer of bodies, then a layer of wood, then a layer of bodies, and so on.

3800 Burned in One Furnace

"After this was done the Germans tried to burn the bodies. At first the fire did not catch well enough and we were ordered to reconstruct the entire furnace.

"The Germans brought iron fences from a Jewish cemetery nearby and we succeeded in building a furnace which would burn furiously. Seven hundred bodies were piled on one layer and then a new layer would be started. This continued until there were approximately 3800 bodies in one furnace. Then gasoline was poured over the entire mass of wood and bodies and the pile was set afire.

"The second furnace we made contained some 1500 bodies. The bodies were those of men, women and children.

"We constructed four or five such stoves.

"We began this work on August 19, 1943, and kept on until September 20, when all the bodies were gone.

"After the burning had stopped and the spot was cooled off, more Russian prisoners were brought in and ordered to break and pulverize any bones remaining. They were also order to sift the earth and remove any gold remaining from rings, teeth and earrings. This gold was carefully collected by the Germans.

Many Buried Alive

"We were then forced to scatter the bones and ashes over the ravine until nothing remained in the place where the bodies were burned."

The Russian soldiers estimated there may have been as many as 80,000 bodies in the ravine, including those of some Russian officers. Too much credence, however, should not be given to these estimates as it is always difficult scientifically to count while working.

"Many of the victims were still alive when they were buried, so that the ground moved after the pits had been filled in," said others interviewed here.

"Many of us who fell ill or did not work energetically enough were shot," the three Red Army men said. "Some of our men went mad."

"New prisoners were constantly being brought to the ravine. We were fed 200 grams of bread daily, along with potato soup.

"When we were finished burning all the bodies, we were not returned to the camp. Instead, we were ordered to prepare a place for a new furnace. Since all the bodies were gone, we felt this was being prepared for us.

"We determined to escape. While digging up the bodies we found some keys. One of our number, who was a locksmith, succeeded in fitting one of the keys to the lock of the door to our barracks. This was a grated door so that a hand could be pushed through to lock it.

"On September 28 we had the key that fitted the lock. Each of us went to work trying to unlock our manacles, using knives, nails and anything we could find.

"After midnight we unlocked the door. A guard heard the sound.

But we made a lot of noise stirring coffee in a big pail and the guard did not investigate.

"Shortly afterward we pushed open the doors and rushed the guards."

Human Remains Found

But, so far as the Russian soldiers know, they were the only three to have escaped alive. The Germans offered a reward of 10,000 rubles for the head of each of these.

After they completed their story, the Russian commission on atrocities began digging on the spot. The commission charged it had found gold teeth and other grim human remains.

Testimony regarding the shooting of Jews is not confined to the City of Kiev. The same charge has been made in other cities and in most villages which I have visited following their liberation from the Nazis.

In every case such stories were supported by local residents whom I interviewed, including priests, peasants and workers.

Time and history eventually will give the evidence to render a verdict.

American carrier planes swooped down on Rabaul Harbor, Jap stronghold, with bombs and torpedoes November 5 and the many Jap ships there tried to clear out of the harbor. Many of them were hit and some sunk. Here some of the ships can be seen trying to get out of the harbor. Others have been hit.

and God have mercy on the Japs."

The marines originally were scheduled to charge ashore at 8:30 a. m. but the Japs succeeded in holding off our landing until 13 minutes past 9. At that moment rockets shot up from the shore, telling us that the first wave had landed. Fragmentary communications by portable radio units enabled the marines ashore to report:

"Opposition stiffest."

The men of our leader, Capt. William Mitchell were called to their boats and we piled in. The landing craft then were loaded with howitzers, ammunition, a cargo net and a suspended crane.

"We have been told to go ashore at the intersection of beaches 1 and 2," said Mitchell, a 39-year-old former lumberjack of Oregon and a graduate of the University of Michigan.

He explained that the boats with heavy loads were unable to go across the coral-fronted beach 1 where we had been scheduled to land and where the stubborn enemy resistance was ripping up riflemen forced to wade ashore.

Pfc. James Hickham of Kansas City was handling a walkie-talkie radio connected with scouts ashore. The whizz of bullets on the beach could be heard through the walkie-talkie.

Our landing boat crashed into rolling swells, drenching us with salty spray and making more than one Marine vomit over the sides.

When we reached our line of departure, we received orders from a control boat—one of the valiant minesweepers—saying it would be impossible for our boat to go in. We were ordered to dismantle our guns, meet some smaller craft and transfer the dismantled weapons for a dash ashore.

Heading in to meet the other craft, the boat was taken under fire by Jap 3-inchers and snipers with machineguns posted on the beached wreck of an enemy vessel.

Shells and bullets whined close aboard, the former frequently bursting with alarming blasts. All of us crouched with our heads below the cowling. You knew the Japs had the range so you hoped and prayed, and felt your insides contract, while the boats circled for what seemed ages awaiting the return of the boats to meet us. They didn't come.

Marines Swimming

Standing nosed up from the water, other landing craft were victims of shore guns. Two Marines who had escaped destruction in this manner were still swimming with lifebelts.

After minues of waiting, the captain ordered the boats out of range of the shore guns. But we hadn't gone far when a boat loaded with wounded showed up.

A Navy medical captain, his silver eagles shining in the sunlight and his shirt streaked with blood of the men he'd attended, ordered us to give him a boat quickly so he could speed the wounded to the hospital ships. There, under the unceasing whine and blast of Jap shells, we helped transfer the wrecks of men and saw for the first time the horrible scenes ashore.

The face of one man was little more than a mass of butchered meat. The body twitched. Improvised crimson-stained bandages hid gaping holes in the bodies of others, taut, gray countenances bespeaking their pain.

You could see other boats discharging riflemen into water so shallow the boats couldn't go any farther. Struggling to get ashore at any cost, wading through knee-deep greenish water, they carried on as men next them were cut down and tumbled gropingly and helplessly out of sight. Those reaching shore fired sporadicly, but were unable to advance in most cases, being pinned to the beach in foxholes and under protective coral ledges until heavy weapons, ammunition and reinforcements arrived.

Waited Overnight

Our howitzers floated uselessly in boats in the lagoon until Captain Mitchell received the order "proceed to the beach immediately."

The captain planned to have the men walk ashore, carrying pieces of guns, but the boats were unable to get in close enough to carry out his plan, so all but a few of Mitchell's men were forced to wait overnight before landing.

In the darkness, lightly loaded riflemen were slipped ashore and the tenuous beachhold was gradually strengthened.

The shoreline continued through the night with tracers slashing through the darkness as well as heavy shells from the warships, which were hurled in against the strong points from time to time. Their impact was felt with shuddering suddenness even in the boats offshore where sleep was fitful and difficult.

In the early nightfall, the Japanese sought to counterattack with torpedo bombers which flew like fireflies into streams of fiery ack ack tracers.

More boats went in next day. Shortly after noon field pieces were docked and run into the beach across the battered jetty.

Landed in Afternoon

Meanwhile I had transferred to a traffic control boat to observe the landing operations at still closer range and in the afternoon climbed up the pier, almost stepping on the battered bodies of marines.

The tip of the pier was crowded with incoming supplies and outgoing wounded, among whom was a Japanese shot in the stomach and being carefully attended. On one end of the dock lay two Jap marines, one with a leg shot away.

Alongside the jetty in the water lay shattered landing boats on their sides, draped with the battered bodies of marines; light tanks which didn't get ashore; smashed oil drums and debris, and forever silent marines whose limp forms floated on lifebelts they'd inflated wading ashore.

The beachmaster informed us that our battalion encountered the stubbornest opposition and the command post was unable to set upon beach one, but was operating from beach two.

To reach the still wobbly and machinegunned beachhead, I joined a medical detachment, crowding into one of the landing craft with doctors and a chaplain.

I struggled ashore through the snipers' fire from Japs who'd managed to get in the battered landing craft and pick off marines on the beach and jetty, where one fell only a few feet from me.

At the regimental aid station I found the captain doctor we'd seen the day before directing the transfer of wounded. He was catching a nap in a foxhole after 36 continuous hours of work.

Reds Gain in White Russia

the Korosten and Chernyakhov areas north of Zhitomir.

A German broadcast asserted a Nazi counterattack had captured Korosten, 45 miles above Zhitomir, and annihilated its defenders.

All advices from Moscow indicated the Russians were pouring columns upon columns of reinforcements into that fiercely-fought sector.

From the Kiev bulge to the Pripet, Soviet forces apparently are being consolidated to sped the White Russian drive, and the northern flank on the west bank of the Dnieper is being strongly buttressed.

The German communique told of encircling and wiping out the Soviet defenders of Korosten, without admitting that the Russian ever had taken the town. It declared the Russians "who temporarily perate resistance."

With rain and snow falling alternately, cold fog overhanging the battlefields, and mud clogging the roads, German armored forces found themselves at a sharp disadvantage, whereas Red soldiers holding fast in trenches and standing by open positions were reported repulsing all attacks, and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy.

In the Ukraine, meanwhile, column after column of white-camouflaged Russian tanks were reported crunching across the snowy steppes for the first real winter battle of the Soviet campaign.

Battlefront dispatches spoke of the arrival of massive new forces to give the Soviet forces in the south new striking power.

The German propaganda machine began talking apprehensively of worsening weather along the penetrated the eastern part of the town were wiped out despite de entire Eastern front. In the past, this was generally forecast further Russian advances.

A Paris broadcast spoke of "snow coming down in increasing masses" in some sectors while elsewhere "rain and mud make the roads useless and at some places—notably in the area from west of Chernigov to north of Gomel—the temperatures are below the freezing point."

Moscow said Red army groups were pressing forward through the soggy forests and swamps of the Pripet marshland area to threaten an important German concentration point and communications center in the Mozyr-Kalinkovich region of White Russia.

Three railroads, which make their junction at Kalinkovich, have already been cut and only a single railway, extending west through the Pripet marshes to Pinsk, is left for the escape of the large German garrison in that sector. And that line is prey to guerilla bands of the swamplands.

The German communique also referred to action on the Perekop Peninsula in the Crimea where they said they had recaptured a height and held it "against numerous enemy counterattacks." It added that "heavy defense battles" continued in the great Dnieper bend region of the Ukraine and "enemy forces which broke in locally were thrown back or sealed off."

400 Nazis Perish Along River That Beat Napoleon

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—The Berezina River made news today. It was just 131 years ago that it brought final disaster for Napoleon in Russia.

Today's Moscow communique told of the capture of 24 villages and death for 400 Germans along the lower reaches of the river, west of Gomel.

Napoleon suffered enormous losses in crossing the Berezina in 1812 in the retreat from Moscow. He crossed north of Borizov—some 125 miles northwest of the fighting today—but lost so heavily that his reatreat from then on was virtually headlong flight. Napoleon's crossing began November 26, 1812, ending the afternoon of the 28th.

His losses never were tabulated, but three days later he had only 8800 men fit for duty. He had invaded Russia with about 450,000.

Marine Goes Back, Slug in Shoulder, After More Japs

With United States Marine Assault Troops on Tarawa Atoll, Nov. 22 (Delayed) (AP).—A hero among Marine heroes in the Tarawa invasion was First Lieut. William D. Hawkins, El Paso, Tex., whose platoon knocked out six Japanese pillboxes and killed around 20 of the enemy.

Before the first wave, Hawkins and First Lieut. A. G. Leslie, Milwaukie, Oreg., went ahead alone and rushed and killed six Japs. Then they went back and joined their boat groups.

When ashore, Hawkins fearlessly went forward and worked on machine-gun nests which were raking troops. He poured clip after clip of ammunition into the nests and tossed grenades as his men brought him more ammunition. He finally was hit in the shoulder.

A doctor said he couldn't remove the slug as he didn't have the proper instruments.

Hawkins replied, "Forget it, Doc," grabbed another automatic rifle, all the grenades he could carry, and started out again.

15,000 See Launching Of Seaplane Tender

Los Angeles Harbor, Nov. 28 (INS).—Largest ship ever launched from a commercial yard on the Pacific Coast, the Navy's seaplane tender, Norton Sound, slid down the ways today at ceremonies attended by 15,000 spectators.

Mrs. Ernest T. Gunter, wife of the commanding admiral of the Naval Air Center at San Diego, christened the ship.

The Norton Sound was constructed by the Los Angeles Shipbuilding and Drydock Co.

Houdaille Employes Ask U. S. to Take Over

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 28 (AP). Members of Local 850, CIO-United Automobile Workers, at the House engineering division of the Houdaille-Hershey Corporation voted today to ask the Federal Government to assume operation and maintenance of the plant, Nelson Amey, local president, said.

Amey, in a statement, asserted the "company refuses to deal with the union in good faith" and declared, "because of this the morale of the workers is low and production has suffered."

Postwar Dip Avoidable, Miss Perkins Says

Boston, Nov. 28 (AP).—Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins declared tonight that there would not be and "need not be a depression" after the war in discussing plans of labor, industry and Government to prevent postwar unemployment. She spoke before the Charles Street Forum.

In order to assure that unemployment for those let off from munitions jobs should be short, she urged that every help be given by the Government, employers, trade unions and the general public.

New Demands Made On Nazis at UNRRA

Postwar Danger

Raid Losses Peril Reich Population

By Ernest G. Fischer
Associated Press Sports Writer

Heavy casualties in the Berlin raids emphasize the fact that Germany's population cannot stand a war of attrition.

Aside from the morale factor, the loss of life among the Reich's 80 million population will be felt in postwar developments.

Dr. Friedrich Burgdoefer, Nazi statistician, stated before the war that by the end of this century the population of Germany will have dwindled to about two-thirds of its present figure unless the birthrate increases.

Government statistics show that 1,200,086 German civilians have been killed or are missing in air raids up to October 1.

Military Casualties

There are no accurate figures on military casualties, but the Das Schwarze Korps, organ of the Nazi Elite Guard, said recently that "hundreds of death notices" now appearing in German newspapers should remind the people that as a result of "one or two-child habit, 60 per cent of German soldiers" are the only sons in their families.

The Nazi magazine, in an appeal for a higher birthrate, explained "20 years from now Germany will also need a strong army."

That was the theme when the Nazis came to power in 1933, when the birth rate was 15.7 per 1000. By 1940, the government claimed, the rate had been boosted to 20, but experts figured it would take at least 22 births per 1000 to maintain the nation's numbers.

Distant Battle Fronts

Obstacles were the increased distance from home of the battle fronts and the longer duration of campaigns. Statistics showed births increased at a higher rate after the Polish, Western and Balkan campaigns than they did after the Russian campaign was undertaken.

Dr. Burgdorfer, citing statistics since the beginning of the conflict, asserted "in war a good furlough policy is the best population policy."

On the defensive, Hitler's furlough policy is dictated by military necessity. That, together with current military and civilian casualties as well as a recurrence of the economic stress which followed World War I, is calculated to have a marked effect on any army which might be mustered 20 years hence.

Delegates Ask Land's Reduction To Minor Power

By Sigrid Arne

Atlantic City, Nov. 28 (AP).—The concerted desire of the European countries to reduce Germany to the position of a minor power was highlighted for the fourth time today when P. A. Kerstens, delegate from the Netherlands, held a press conference to discuss plans for rehabilitating European industry.

He said, "it is my definite opinion Germany must never again be restored to her position as a major power."

Earlier in the week the delegates had agreed that Germany must pay the entire bill for any UNRRA relief accorded her.

Must Pay in Kind

The Norwegian Ambassador, Wilhelm de Munthe Morgenstierne, announced that he believes Germany must "pay in kind from the outset," adding that he thought it would be perfectly fair to insist that Germany restore to Norway the four million tons of shipping which she has destroyed.

And the Polish delegate, Jan Kwapinski, early in the conference, as well as Assistant Secretary of State Dean Acheson, had pointed out that the United Nations may find in Germany surplus supplies which can be used to assist the Axis-ravaged nations.

First Airing of Views

This, the first of the international conferences contingent on the close of the war, has been the first opportunity for European officials to air their views on Germany's fate.

The several expressions here are interpreted to mean that the invaded nations will arrive at the peace conference ready to demand provisions that will strip German down to an economy that will provid nothing more than a living within her own borders.

Kerstens said that, as minister of economics, he already has had conversations with officials of the exiled governments of Czechoslovakia, Poland and Belgium looking toward a production system in which the invaded countries can buy and sell among themselves, thereby passing up Germany, from whom they have traditionally bought manufactured products.

Committee reports, except for a few changes, are ready for adoption by the full council tomorrow, and the session is scheduled to end Wednesday.

Palestine Group Asks Ban on Limit Of Immigration

New York, Nov. 28 (AP).—The National Labor Committee for Palestine today adopted a resolution demanding the revocation of the British white paper prohibiting immigration in force into Palestine after next March.

Cessation of "attacks" in the Palestine Jewish community and appointment of an inter-parliamentary body to investigate the activities of the British government in Palestine were other demands embodied in the resolution, directed to President Roosevelt, Congress and to the United Nations, and adopted at the closing session of the committee's twentieth anniversary convention.

The resolution said more than "13 million organized American workers have thrown their united strength into the balance on behalf of justice for the Jewish people" and that "six million English workers demand revocation of the white paper."

Axis-Held Women Enduring Darkest Hour, Says Book

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Nov. 28.—Women in 11 countries occupied by the Germans and the Japanese "are enduring the darkest hour womanhood has ever known in world history," according to a booklet issued Tuesday by the Allied governments at London.

Said to be based on eyewitness accounts, the report tells of girls in Poland being regularly abducted and sent to brothels for German soldiers, of girls in Yugoslavia flogged to death or tortured because they refused to reveal secrets of the guerillas, of Norwegian women who have died in concentration camps and of famine-stricken Greek women with starving children in their arms scornfully refusing food.

Thousands of women are dying daily in concentration camps, according to the reports, and hundreds have been shot "for sabotage." Trifling offenses, it was said, have been made excuse for imprisonment and deportation to forced labor. It is pointed out that "the evidence tells its own story of a system without liberty, decency or common humanity."

Berlin Bombers Report

Rommel's Troops Repelled Southeast of Fiume In Fierce Fighting, Yugoslav Partisans Claim

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—Gen Josip Btoz (Tito's) Partisan guerilla force have hurled back Marshal Erwin Rommel's Nazi troops in fierce clashes along the Yugoslav coast southeast of Fiume, a communique said.

Deep inland, where there is no front line and where the war is made up largely of swift, bloody guerilla thrusts, Tito's announcement said his forces had quickened their blows aimed at inflicting as much damage as possible on German positions and supplies before winter weather slows their activities.

The defenders said they had absorbed the blows of Nazi forces piercing downward along the coast in the direction of Novi and Senj, then had seized the initiative themselves and in a series of sharp, hard lashes had forced the enemy into retreat toward the northwest.

Heavy fighting continued at Crikvenica, about 15 miles southeast of Fiume, where the Germans were making a stand.

On Krk, Cherso and Lussino, rocky island guardians to Fiume's approaches, the Yugoslavs said they were still putting up strong resistance despite assaults by overwhelming forces put ashore several days ago.

Tito announced that Kosyeric, Serbian village near Uzice, which lies 70 miles east of Sarajevo, had fallen to one of his inland warrior bands, and described stepped-up forays in interior Montenegro, Bosnia, Croatia and Slovenia.

Other fierce fighting was reported from Dalmatia, where a German column is thrusting toward Skoplje.

The Berlin radio claimed the capture of Kladanj, a central Bosniar town, and said mopping up action against guerillas concentrating near Glina, Croatian town south of Zagreb, was making progress.

It also asserted that three British officers were among 1000 Yugoslav Partisans killed in "mopping up" operations on the Dalmatian coast.

It quoted Croatian reports as saying that in Adriatic provinces "now returned to Croatia," Italian troops during their occupation had imprisoned "about 100,000 Croats and 40,000 Slovenes, and of these more than 90,000 died."

Yank Soldier Jokes Banned On British Radio

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—You can't joke about American soldiers on the BBC network now. You can't even say "Honey Chile."

A stringent code of taboos, adopted by the government-sponsored radio system, forbids jokes about the home guard, black market, police, American soldiers, any of the feminine branches of the armed forces, army officers (although not enlisted men), intoxicating drinks or the bombing of Germany.

The list also included in the ban the American Southern accent, except in minstrel show programs; impersonation of persons on the "Brain Trust" program (English version of "Information Please"), the jazzing of classical music and the singing of nostalgic tunes, lest the latter make soldiers homesick.

1944 Ship Output Can Be 25 Million Tons, Expert Says

Miami Beach, Fla., Nov. 28 (AP). William F. Rockwell, director of ship production for the Maritime Commission, said today the Nation's shipyards are capable of producing 25 million tons of shipping next year.

The 1943 quota of 18 million tons will be exceeded, he added with evident satisfaction. He praised the Commission's chairman, Admiral Emory Scott Land, for the production record.

Rockwell called Henry J. Kaiser, California shipbuilder, a "genius," then added:

"If Kaiser isn't a genius, he at least has a big idea for construction speed, knows shipbuilding, and can get the job done."

Rockwell was interviewed here.

Japs Smash Vainly at Gate To Changsha

Chungking (Monday), Nov. 29 (AP).—Desperate Japanese attempts to capture the Changteh gateway to Changsha were reported today by the Chinese.

The city's defenders held out against incessant artillery and air bombardment from all sides.

The Chinese said previously they had surrounded a large force of Japanese in northern Hunan province, the area in which Changteh is situated, and were fighting to liquidiate it.

The high command charged the Japanese with using poison gas on 13 ceasions Friday, but said the Chinese had fought back and annihilated more than 2000 of the invaders. Sunday, the enemy attack was blunted and Changteh still remained in Chinese hands. There were signs that the Japanese were evacuating the town of Taoyuan, southwest of Changteh on the "rice route" from Hunan to Szechwan province.

Another Chinese force between Taoyuan and Tungting Lake, however, has been surrounded by the Japanese headquarters admitted.

Chinese and American planes sank a number of enemy boats on Tungting Lake and the Yunan River.

A broadcast yesterday from Berlin declared that 14 United States planes, including three B-24 bombers, were shot down Saturday in an air battle with the Japanese over Rangoon.

The broadcast said two Japanese planes were lost.

Milk-Ration Plan Ready, but May Not Become Necessary

By the Associated Press

The Government is developing a plan to ration milk, but sees a good chance that it may not be necessary to put it into effect.

The plan, worked out by the Office of Price Administration, calls for rationing only in areas of acute shortage and provides larger quantities of milk for babies and children than for adults.

The War Food Administration emphasized last night, however, that it has issued no directive for milk rationing and that the supply outlook for several months ahead does not indicate any necessity for such a step.

"To the man who asked for Calvert and went away . . . mad!"

"YESTERDAY was a tough day in my liquor store. I had to tell a lot of customers that I didn't have the brand they asked for—but that more was expected in a few days.

It's not pleasant to have to disappoint anyone. But worst of all is to have someone leave my store thinking that I am to blame—or that the distillers are to blame for the scarcity of liquor.

When you get right down to it—there is only one real reason for low liquor stocks. It's the war. And I don't have a single customer who doesn't honestly agree that the war comes first.

I know for a fact that Calvert hasn't distilled whiskey for over a year. All they are distilling is war alcohol for munitions, rubber and medical supplies.

I still get some Calvert Whiskey to sell. But I don't get as much as I could use, because every drop of it is being drawn from irreplaceable reserves which must last till more can be distilled.

And even if I did get twice as much Calvert these days—it wouldn't be enough to go around, because more and more people are asking for Calvert. They know it is prewar quality in every way.

If you'll keep asking for Calvert, I'll keep trying to supply you. I still get my fair share delivered to me. You may count on me to try to portion it fairly to my customers."

Thomas Calls Brewster Case Labor Smear

the factor responsible for the failure of production."

Thomas accused the committee of excluding vital statistical evidence on the Brewster situation, one of them the result of an official survey by the U. S. Manpower Commission. He alleged this was done because the committee sought only testimony which would injure the union in the plant.

The UAW leader also accused the committee of adopting a "cynical" attitude toward progress made in the plants since Henry J. Kaiser became its active director.

Thomas said that he aided in negotiating the Brewster labor contract and that he is the chief spokesman for the Brewster workers as well as all other members of the UAW-CIO.

"I therefore feel it was completely unfair and not in the best interests of an important investigation for your committee to refuse to hear me," Thomas wrote.

He said committee members and witnesses were permitted "to stray far from the subject purportedly under investigation."

"You permitted arguments in favor of the 'open shop;' you permitted criticism of the Wagner Act and the War Labor Board; you permitted attacks on features of Brewster contracts which are common to most labor-management contracts in our country; you entered into personal matters which you failed to show had any connection whatever with production at Brewster," Thomas wrote Drewry.

"Any fair-minded person reading the testimony would be struck immediately with the persistency with which you tried to badger witnesses who did not agree with you, tried to misinterpret their remarks and tried time and again to put in the mouths of witnesses attacks on the Brewster local union which they did not desire to make."

The 11-page communication to Drewry was concluded with an expression of confidence in the management of Kaiser.

"The officers of Brewster Local 365 have pledged Mr. Kaiser their utmost cooperation," it said. "For the first time they have a production man in whom the workers can have faith. Already Mr. Kaiser's management has been able to report a substantial increase in production and steadily improving labor morale and labor relations."

New-Type Bomb Used on Berlin

interception by British fighters of German day raiders which dropped bombs in the southeast coastal area of Britain without causing either damage or casualties. Some of the German bombers, perhaps part of the vaunted Nazi reprisal raiders, also fell into the sea.

One London air correspondent wrote that incendiary bombs by the thousands were probably unloaded on Berlin and suggested some were of a new type which defy the efforts of firefighters to put them out.

The correspondent also said the RAF had increased the bomb loads of its big bombers by as much as 25 per cent in recent months.

With only two days of November remaining, the expenditure in heavy bombers for 10 major operations, including one raid by the greatest four-engine force ever sent over Germany, totalled 155, the smallest loss since the 150 downed in March. The most costly month was August when 293 heavies were lost in 14 formidable attacks, among them two assaults on Berlin which alone accounted for 105 of the losses.

Goebbels, speaking on "the most burning problem of them all," said the Allies were mistaken if they thought they could gain a "cheap victory" by casting fire and bomb upon German cities and again darkly threatened aerial reprisals against Britain "with interest and double interest."

The Nazi propagandist told the German people that "feverish industrial preparations for these reprisals" were being made day and night, and when "they crash down on Britain, the British people will be able to thank those who attack our peaceful cities under fog and darkness and rain fire devastation, suffering and death on our women and children."

Kaiser, Goebbels Alike

New York, Nov. 28 (AP).—Parallels were drawn by the British radio between Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels' speech today and an address by Kaiser Wilhelm September 9, 1918, on the eve of abdication and defeat. The broadcast said:

"Speaking to Krupps' workers that day, the Kaiser said: 'God will revenge Germany at the last moment.' Goebbels said today: 'It would be a satanical paradox if there were no retribution for the harm done to German cities.'

"Today Goebbels claimed that Germany would never capitulate. The Kaiser said: 'We will fight and hold on to the last, so help us God.'

"Goebbels said today that Germany would never be defeated. He echoed the Kaiser's words in 1918: 'The enemy realize that they can never defeat the German army and the German navy.'"

War Sidelights

Nazis Know They've Lost, Kepner Says

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—Maj. Gen. William E. Kepner, Eighth Air Force Fighter command chief, asserted in a broadcast today that "I think we can say the Germans already know they can't win."

"The enemy can fight back cleverly with limited resources, but he can't win against the hammer blows of an air force which will continue to grow while his is wiped out," the American general continued.

"The fact is, our pilots' morale is getting higher while German pilots' morale has nowhere to go but downhill. Already we can see the German weakening in the air whenever the weather permits us to carry out sustained operations. We find them unable to resist us in certain places."

"We can go high enough to minimize the flak; we've got armor plating; and we've got unheard of firepower. Never have our bombers suffered the losses the Huns did in the battle for Britain," he concluded.

Naples Sings Again

Naples, Italy, Nov. 28 (AP).—The only railway in the world which has its own special theme song has resumed operation here and thousands of Neapolitans are again humming the familiar strains of "Funiculi, Funicula."

The city's tiny cliff-climbing funicular cars have been restored to activity after two months of war-induced idleness.

Naples, built mainly on hills too steep for ordinary streetcars, has six cogwheel railways. A seventh climbs the abrupt slopes of Mount Vesuvius.

Before they were expelled, the Germans damaged the funiculars' machinery.

The song, "Funiculi, Funicula," was written in 1880 to celebrate the appearance of the first of the cable cars.

Antilles Chiefs to Vichy

Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 28 (AP).—Seventeen French naval officers and officials from the French Antilles, including former Gov. Gen. Constantin Sorin of Guadeloupe, arrived here tonight from Lisbon, Portugal, en route to Vichy.

The former governor general of Martinique, Admiral Georges Robert, who surrendered to the Allies at Martinique last July and now is in Lisbon, is expected to arrive shortly.

Capt. Stewart in Europe

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—Capt. James Stewart, former movie star who commands a Liberator bomber quadron, has arrived in the European theater, it was announced today by U. S. Eighth Air Force headquarters. He piloted a four-engine bomber in from its last stop, more than 900 miles away.

to belligerent nations asking them to respect the "air neutrality" of Vatican City.

Von Papen Reported Returning

Adding to the current of peace rumors, the British news agency, Reuters, said in a dispatch from Atlantic City, N. J., Saturday, that reports the Germans have taken or were about to take preliminary steps for an armistice were given "considerable credence" by European members of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration meeting in Atlantic City.

Whatever Von Papen's mission to Berlin may have been, it apparently had been concluded for the present. Turkish dispatches Saturday said the diplomat had arrived at Budapest, en route back to Ankara.

Hitler Paper Bombed

Stockholm, Nov. 28 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, reappeared in Stockholm today for the first time since Tuesday, a change in type and reduction in the number of columns from six to five, indicating that its Berlin plant had been bombed out.

Guinea, destroying 13 enemy planes on the ground and in the air

Barges carrying 200 Japanese troops were sunk by artillery fire in the Vitiaz Straits off northeastern New Guinea.

Our bombers made an audacious night attack on the waterfront at Rabaul, the enemy's big New Britain air and sea base, and left towering fires in a bombing and strafing raid of Japanese villages along northwestern New Guinea.

Bombers with a fighter escort encountered no interception in their raid on the Wewak and Borm areas of New Guinea, although they lost one plane to antiaircraft fire.

Five Japanese aircraft were destroyed on the ground and about 25 others were bombed and strafed with unobserved results at Wewak, and numerous fires were started in supply dumps and installations.

Ten escorted Japanese bombers attacked Allied positions along the New Guinea coast in the Finschhafen area, but only minor damage was reported. At least eight of the enemy fighters were shot down on their homeward flight.

No mention was made of Allied ground positions either on New Guinea, where the Australians have taken the strategic plateau area of Sattelberg.

Yard Launches 4th Sub In Less Than Month

Groton, Conn., Nov. 28 (AP).—The Cobia, the fourth submarine to slide down the ways at the Electric Boat Co.s plant here since October 31, was launched today with Mrs. Cary W. Magruder wife of Captain Magruder of the Naval Training Station, Newport, Rhode Island, as sponsor.

It was the company's twenty-second launching in 40 weeks.

wear hats and overcoats to keep warm. Boards and paper hold back the gusts of cold wind from gaping window openings. People with candles are considered extremely fortunate.

One correspondent wrote that Berliners have started walking to work as early as 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning because of the stalled transport system. The streets are jammed until 6 p.m., he said, when the people throng into shelters for the night, leaving them deserted.

"The people of Berlin, as in Hamburg and Cologne, write their names on pieces of ruins and send them to friends," wrote another correspondent. "That is much more effective than all police announcements."

Federal Yards Launch 2 More Destroyer Escorts

Newark, N. J., Nov. 28 (AP).—Two more destroyer escorts, the Baker and the Coffman, slid down the ways of the Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Port Newark yards today, bringing to 30 the number of DE's launched from the yard.

Officials of the U. S. Steel subsidy said the yard was turning out one of the submarine fighters every five days, and that production time had been cut almost in half since the first were delivered.

Russian Press Warns Against Complacency

By Henry C. Cassidy

Moscow, Nov. 28 (AP).—The Soviet press warned today against complacency and over-confidence and urged an intensified struggle for final victory over Germany.

Three leading publications—Red Star, Pravda and Izvestia—devoted front page editorials to calls for fresh efforts and the quick and complete reoccupation of White Russia.

Red Star recalled Premier Marshal Stalin's statement of November 6 that victory could be won only by strong action, and might be lost if the people were lulled by immediate successes.

"The enemy's stubbornness," Red Star said, "should be met with tenfold stubbornness.

"There should be a law that every German counterattack in any sector should result in mass extermination of the enemy manpower and material."

Izvestia, under the heading, "Ahead for Our Soviet White Russia," warned, "There are many battles, clashes and experiences for the future" but asserted, "our army has covered more than two-thirds of its victorious route and will pass the remaining third in battle."

Pravda listed Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia, Moldavia and Karelia with White Russia, the Ukraine and the Crimea as Red army objectives.

"If at the outbreak of the war the United States was insufficiently prepared, it turned out that during the course of the war, thanks to urgent and energetic measures, the United States made up for this negligence," the article said. "Responsibility for the lack of preparation to a considerable extent rests with the isolationists."

The article reflected a general satisfaction with the development of the American attitude on international affairs.

Italian Party Campaigns for Savoy Regime

Naples, Nov. 28 (AP).—The monarchists' "blue party," newest group to enter Italy's political arena, opened a high-pressure campaign today to rally support to the shaky cause of the royal house of Savoy.

The party is not supporting King Vittorio Emanuele but Crown Prince Umberto.

Placards, calling on the people to rally to the monarchy, appeared throughout the city. Pamphlets reminding the people of the services of the house of Savoy to Italy were disseminated throughout towns and villages liberated from the Germans.

An article of the same general content was submitted to dignitaries of the church and many Italians said that in some churches this morning sermons carried out the same theme.

The "blue party" takes its name from an organization of Italian war veterans formed in 1919 to resist what was called "bolshevism."

It has opened offices in Naples. The leaders are not prominent Italians, but a number of well-known aristocrats and highly placed army and navy officers are reported to be members.

It is the only organization as such actively to support the monarchy. The other six political parties are united in demanding that the King abdicate and that Umberto renounce the throne.

Photographer Makes Tarawa, but Ruins His Cameras

With U. S. Marine Assault Troops on Tarawa Atoll, Nov. 20 (Delayed) (AP).—Frank Filan, Associated Press photographer, ruined both of his cameras in a dash to the beach with one of the first groups of Marines landing on Tarawa.

Although weighted with equipment, Filan turned back to help a man who had been shot and was trying to return to the landing boat.

After going back a considerable distance under heavy fire, Filan saw they would never make the boat. He persuaded the injured man they should try for the beach again. They made it, but since he is a short man, Filan often went in over his head when he stepped into holes made by bombs—and his cameras were ruined.

Drug Addiction Cases Cut 50% In Allied Nations During War

By Lee Carson

In the midst of total war, the United States is making great strides toward world-wide victory over an ancient and terrible scourge of mankind—drug addiction.

H. J. Anslinger, United States Commissioner of Narcotics, disclosed last night that the number of drug addicts in the Allied-controlled world has been cut 50 per cent since the Pearl Harbor attack.

In addition, he said, a 20-year battle to halt Government sales in the British and Dutch empires has been won.

This month both the British and the exile Dutch governments announced that Government-controlled drug shops would be closed "permanently," and that drugs would be sold and exported only under medicinal certificate, once their colonies and protectorates have been wrested from Japan.

Anslinger said:

"The British and Dutch decision to join us in the war against the drug traffic means that the postwar world is already assured freedom from slavery of one sort and that the living standards and usefulness of untold millions will automatically be raised several notches."

Since the war began September 3, 1939, Anslinger added, the number of drug addicts in this country alone has been reduced by "a conservative 60 per cent" and the price of illegal opium increased something more than 600 per cent. Principal sources of illicit drugs now are Mexico, Iran and other Middle Eastern countries.

Sailors on Lend-Lease ships returning from cargo hauls to the Middle East are smuggling in drugs "in very small amounts," Anslinger disclosed, and there is "a little coming across the Mexican border," but the big source of supply in the Far East has been cut off entirely.

Mexico, cooperating with the United States Bureau of Narcotics, has established a border patrol to restrict further leakage of the drug into the United States.

"There is more money than ever in the dope peddling racket," he added, "but the stuff is almost impossible to get in any quantity, and the addicts themselves are being cured by involuntarily 'forced reduction.'"

Army Tells Saga of Battalion

The War Department told last night the saga of a battalion of the Forty-fifth Division whose exploits are believed to equal, if they do not surpass, those of any fighting unit in American military history.

The story of the battalion's stamina, courage and will to fight was brought to Washington by Col. Raymond C. Hamilton, Infantry, member of the Army ground forces board which spent five months in Sicily and the Italian mainland.

Lieut. Col. Clarence B. Cochran of Okemah, Okla., was commander of the battalion which, in six days, following capture of a Sicilian beachhead, aided in taking a vital airport, captured an enemy tank park, took large numbers of prisoners, repelled savage counterattacks and marched 36 miles in 48 hours "itchin' to fight again."

That was plenty of action, but the zest for battle and excitement impelled the men to smash forward again and take 14 tanks, a fleet of trucks and 470 prisoners.

The battalion's heroic action began when it landed on the Sicilian beachhead. For six days the unit was in almost continuous battle, bringing the query from a Nazi officer prisoner:

"Don't you Americans ever sleep?"

The story of the entire battalion is made up of action of platoons and squads within it which engaged in combat. One rifle platoon and a machinegun squad, cut off from the rest of the unit, fought their way back, taking with them 60 prisoners, several guns and seven wounded men.

At the same time one company took an enemy stronghold with underground concrete emplacements and a concrete roadblock, adding to its record of captured equipment 12 machine guns and two field pieces.

Infantry Must Have Best Men, Says McNair

Air nad sea power will not win the war, but the decisive and final struggle will be fought by the infantry, Lieut. Gen. Leslie J. McNair, commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, declared yesterday in an address on the Army Hour broadcast of NBC.

He protested against giving "priority on our best manpower" to the production of the "highly technical and complicated equipment manned by a modern army," asserting:

"Infantry squads, platoons and companies call for the cream of our manpower. Victories are won in the forward areas—by men with brains and fighting hearts, not by machines."

The general declared that the German surface navy has been "all but swept from the seas" and German submarines "have been largely defeated," while in the Pacific the United States Navy is "greatly superior to the Jap navy," and the Allies have a great air superiority at every primary point of contact with the enemy.

"Yet" he said, "there has been no decision; the enemy still is strong and defiant."

"Defeat of the German and Jap by sea and air does not defeat them on land," General McNair continued. " . . . Africa passed finally to the Allies only with the surrender of the German-Italian armies. Step-by-step progress in New Guinea, the Solomons, and the Gilberts also is marked by this same action on land. . . . Our control of the sea and air and over Italy is complete and overwhelming, yet the going on land is tough. . . . The ever-present front lines of war maps are simply where the infantryman is. It is true that he is supported magnificently by artillery and air, but this support is behind and above him. There is nothing in front of him but the enemy. . . . The only force that can break the hostile infantry is our own infantry. . . .

"Today the infantry numbers less than one-fifth of our Army. . . . The infantryman not only takes far more than half of our total battle losses, but he endures the greater hardships, he gets more tired, he sleeps less and he eats when and what he can. Military men know that the greatness of the German army throughout the years has stemmed from its infantry. The Jap infantry is that army's most formidable branch. It is high time that our people appreciate and glorify our own infantry."

Hungary Urged To Make Peace

Stockholm, Nov. 28 (AP).—Hungary should try to make peace, and no longer is bound by the three-power Axis pact, Parliament Deputy Zsilinczsky declared in a debate Saturday on the foreign ministry budget, a Budapest dispatch said today.

Hungary can get out of the war without breaking her word, since Italy's capitulation invalidated the tri-power pact, he said, urging that the first step be withdrawal of Hungarian troops still on Russian soil.

The dispatch said loud applause from the opposition parties greeted the statement.

(A Cairo broadcast, quoting Ankara reports, said today that five Rumanian divisions had gone home from Russia, with three sailing from the Crimea and two from Odessa.)

Senate Groups Will Tackle Tax, Subsidies

2. An increase in the corporate tax rate from 40 to at least 50 per cent.

3. Elimination of the option to compute excess profits on the average-earnings method.

4. Increased tax rates and lowered exemptions for estates and gifts.

5. Elimination of "special privileges" so as to provide for mandatory joint returns, taxation of governmental securities, and elimination of percentage-depletion allowances for oil and mining properties.

Asks Tax Rise on Big Profits

"Additional revenue should come," the group said, "from increased taxation of comfortable and large incomes, unprecedented corporate profits and large estates.

However, in previewing what action the committee may take, Senator George has precluded any changes in the House provisions covering corporate and individual income taxes. This does not mean, he stated, that the committee will not increase the amount of the bill through additional taxes on some other source.

Prosubsidy Forces Gain

On price subsidies, Administration forces found themselves last night in a position only slightly improved—thanks to Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican) of Ohio who led the fight for a compromise when Congress was faced with the identical question just prior to the summer recess.

Senator Taft, more hopeful last night, said the Banking and Currency Committee would meet tomorrow and pass at least the rest of the week considering the anti-subsidy legislation, which is contained in a measure extending the authorization for the Commodity Credit Corp.

"I think we should go over each of these subsidies and find out just what is objectionable about each, and see what can be done about them," Senator Taft said. "They have a subsidy on vegetable oil written into the bill, and I am in favor of it. Some of the subsidies, I think, are O.K., but others are objectionable. I would think some way could be worked out to maintain those which are good, and I hope that we will be able to work out some kind of a plan."

Senator Taft rejected as a basis for compromise a proposal to preclicate the use of a limited subsidy fund on enforcement of the "little steel" wage line, which won the strongest support of any compromise in the House.

"I never approved of allowing only a 15 per cent wage increase when the cost of living was up 23 per cent," he said, calling such a proposal "unworkable."

Received Daily

Hay Shipped To Ward Off Milk Drought

Heavy shipments of hay to insure metropolitan Washington and other areas against a milk drought are being received daily, Dr. T. K. Wolfe of Richmond, Va., who is in charge of the Commodity Credit Corporation's purchasing and distributing program, announced yesterday.

Receipts have almost doubled within the past fortnight and are now averaging 100 cars daily, Dr. Wolfe said. The hay is going to drought-stricken sections of Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and North Carolina.

Purchasing and distribution is handled by the Southern States Cooperative and orders to date total 4360 carloads. Of this number 2325 cars have been delivered. Present demand indicates 7500 more carloads will be needed.

The cooperative stipulated any earning from the sale of the hay would be refunded to the Government, and it was said at least $100,000 was expected to be returned.

Peninsula Hospital Gets Large Donations

Salisbury, Md., Nov. 28 (AP).—Peninsula General Hospital continued today to receive quantities of rationed and scarce foods in response to the institution's observance of its annual donation day.

Hospital officials said they were surprised at the outpouring of foods that are so difficult to obtain. Gifts to the institution included 25 pounds of sugar in a single donation, cocoa, pineapple juice, jams, jellies, and fresh eggs.

Letter Written by Washington Shows Concern for Mt. Vernon

George Washington wrote his favorite nephew in the summer of 1787, inquiring and giving instructions about management of his beloved Mount Vernon home. But until the latter was acquired recently by the Library of Congress, its contents were not known.

Published in full for the first time in the first issue of the Library's "Quarterly Journal of Current Acquisitions," the letter reveals the homesickness and concern with the crops, tools, dogs and building of a cupola for the main house, felt by the first President while affairs of the infant Republic kept him away in Philadelphia.

Inquires After Turnip Seed

"Does your Turnip seed come up?" he asked the young man to whom he had entrusted care of his plantation. "I have sent some Goods and other articles round . . . Among them is a top for the Cupulo of the House, which has been left so long unfinished . . . The wood part must receive a coat of white paint.—The spire must have that of black; the bill of the bird is to be black,—and the olive branch in the mouth of it must be green. . .

"At your aunt's request a Coach Dog: has been purchased and sent for the convenience, & benefit of Madame Moose; her amorous fits should therefore be attended to, that the end for which he is sent may not be defeated by her acceptance of the services of any other dog."

The Journal itself, according to Librarian of Congress Archibald MacLeish, has been designed to be "a more appetizing account" of the library's newest acquisitions "than a pile of catalog cards in printer's proof," and from now will be published quarterly, rather than annually.

Edited by Tait

Its need was realized, he states in an introduction to the booklet, when he saw a justice of the Supreme Court, whose work made it necessary to follow the library's new material, struggling with "meaningless slips of paper his law clerk secured from our printing office."

Edited by Allen Tate, distinguished American poet-critic, who will occupy the library's chair of poetry in English in 1944, the Journal includes besides the "new" washington letter, the text of a note written by Thomas Paine from Paris in 1790 and material on American painter-etchers, serial publications in India, the first Protestant hymn book, and recent Americana.

Council Head Eats Turkey That Paid Lawyer Suing Him

Joseph Speed, president of the local Central Labor Council, yesterday ate the bird that raised the money that paid the lawyer who is suing him.

It all came about when rank and file members of the union decided to raffle a turkey to raise funds to pay their lawyer, who is suing the union for an accounting of funds.

Someone approached Sped to buy a ticket. He did. He won. Saturday the rank-and-filers took the turkey to Speed's home. Yesterday he ate it.

S. 1122 RUBBER-TIRES BILL IN THE 78TH CONGRESS H.R. 2817

A Bill to Provide for Distribution of Motor Vehicle Tires and for Other Purposes—Recommended by the Senate and House Committees on Small Business

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

TIRE INDEPENDENTS' FIGHT AGAINST PRICE DISCRIMINATION

1936. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION directed The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio (Mar., 1936) to cease and desist from discriminating in price between Sears, Roebuck & Co., and Goodyear's retail dealer customers. One of most important cases to come before F.T.C. ¶ In its findings of FACT, the Commission found: (1) That gross discrimination in favor of Sears ranged from 13 to 51 percent; (2) That net average sales price discrimination varied from 29 to 40 percent; (3) That total nat discrimination amounted to approximately $41,000,000, or approximately 26 percent of aggregate net sales price to independent dealers on volume of business comparable to that of Sears; (4) That Goodyear concealed prices and terms at which it was selling tires to Sears from its own sales organization, and from the trade generally; (5) That competition which Sears was thus able to bring into retail tire market was a major factor in driving out of business a large number of retail tire dealers; (6) That this reduction in number of independent tire dealers in turn drove out of business numerous small tire manufacturers. ¶ The price discrimination found to exist, said the Commission in its statement of conclusions, "was not justified on account of difference in grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, or by difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or by good faith to meet competition, and it had the effect of substantially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly". ¶ Independent tire dealers supported this F.T.C. action. The Commission's formal complaint against The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, issued under Section 2 of the Clayton Act, was ordered on Sept. 13, 1933, and was made public on Oct 18, following. Hearings were held for the taking of testimony in a number of cities, including Washington, D. C., and Akron, Ohio. ¶ Some months after issuance of the complaint, attorneys for the respondent entered a motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the evidence had failed to show the violation of the Clayton Act charged in the complaint. This motion was overruled by the Commission on June 22, 1934, and the taking of testimony was resumed. ¶ FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION held voluntary hearings in Chicago (June, 1936) in an endeavor to apply "Fair Trade Practice Rules" to tire industry. ¶ Independent tire dealers supported this F.T.C. action.

1937. "A BILL TO PREVENT MANUFACTURERS of products from offering for sale and selling the same at retail in certain cases, and for other purposes," known as H.R. 4722, was sponsored by CONGRESSMAN WRIGHT PATMAN of Texas. Hearings were held by a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Independent tire dealers supported Bill.

1938. HOUSE RESOLUTION to investigate tire-industry marketing practices introduced by late Congressman John A. Martin of Colorado. Similar SENATE RESOLUTION introduced by Senator John A. Miller of Arkansas, and approved by Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. This resolution was placed on Unanimous Consent Calendar. Independent tire dealers supported both resolutions.

1939. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ordered United States Rubber Company and one of its subsidiaries, U. S. Tire Dealers Corporation, both of New York, (April, 1939) to discontinue price discriminations and payment of special commissions in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act in the sale of automobile tires and tubes. ¶ Among the companies found to be receiving benefits of the discriminations or special commissions were Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., Atlas Supply Company, Western Auto Supply Company, Western Auto Supply Company of Los Angeles, Arkansas Fuel Oil Company, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., American Oil Company, Pan-American Petroleum Corporation, and Tide Water Associated Oil Company. ¶ Findings are that United States Rubber Company, together with its subsidiaries, is one of the country's four largest tire manufacturers, with three principal distributing outlets: (1) automobile manufacturers; (2) certain wholesalers, mail order houses and retail chains selling this company's tires under their own private brands or trademarks; and (3) thousands of wholesale and retail tire dealers and service stations throughout the United States. ¶ Among other things, the order prohibits price discriminations, by or through the subsidiaries or other corporations controlled by the respondent, between a group consisting of Montgomery Ward & Co., Atlas Supply Company, Western Auto Supply Company, Western Auto Supply Company of Los Angeles, and Arkansas Fuel Oil Company, on the one hand, and independent tire dealers, by selling special-brand tires to Montgomery Ward and the four other companies named at net realized prices different and lower than the net realized prices at which U. S. brand tires of like sizes, grade and quality are sold to the independent dealers. ¶ Findings are that United States Rubber Products, Inc., named in the Commission's complaint as the United States Rubber Company's principal subsidiary, was dissolved on or about December 31, 1938, and that the United States Rubber Company succeeded to its business of manufacturing and selling tires. (In their answer to the Commission's complaint the respondents stated that they had discontinued operation of their retail stores.) Independent tire dealers supported this F.T.C. action. ¶ BETTER BUSINESS BUREAUS in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Columbus, Ohio, Long Beach, Calif., Los Angeles, New York City, St. Louis, and other cities, in nationwide program (June, July, Aug., Sept., 1939) condemned major tire companies for publishing "false, deceptive, and confusing advertising." These Better Business Bureaus took vigorous action to compel offending tire makers to discontinue their "brazen use of phoney comparative prices and value claims." In certain cases, indictments were obtained. Independent tire dealers supported this movement.

1940. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION issued formal complaints against The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company and its subsidiary, Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, and The B. F. Goodrich Company, whose advertising had been the "subject of widespread criticism by Better Business Bureaus throughout the country." Independent tire dealers supported this F.T.C. action.

MEMBERS OF SENATE COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS
Speaking Before
SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY
NOVEMBER 17, 1943

SENATOR MURRAY SAID:

I do not need to dwell on something with which I believe your committee is thoroughly familiar, something that is reiterated almost constantly in the press and on the floors of the Senate and the House of Representatives. That is the evident concentration of control of our trade and industry and the threat this has to our democratic system of government. I think we are fairly well agreed that this concentration, if not reversed, leads inevitably to bureaucracies and totalitarianism.

This Congress must take a positive step to break up concentration of control of industry. This tire bill is designed to do that for the tire industry. There is no other proposal similar in purpose before your committee, or before any other committee of the Congress, of which I am aware.

SENATOR MEAD SAID:

(In reply to a colleague who said that he had listened to the testimony before the committees and that to him, seemingly, the great protest of the tire dealers was that the tire manufacturer was selling too cheaply to others engaged in that business."

I will say to my distinguished colleague that I hope I shall never be associated with a revolutionary proposal, even a minor proposal, that has nothing but that as its objective. I think that I am interested from a much deeper and a more fundamental reason. I see injury to my country; I see the elimination of economic opportunity that we should safeguard for every individual who is living here today or who comes to our country in the years that will follow. We should keep the door of opportunity open. I want to prevent large accumulations of wealth from closing the door of opportunity. I want to continue this country as a country where competition and opportunity and private enterprise will survive. That is my reason.

I want to say to you that this subject, since our committee has completed its hearings, has been the subject of propaganda that really ought to be investigated. Our offices have been flooded with information that is absolutely false and contrary to the facts in practically every detail.

You have just listened to a statement that would indicate that this legislation comes before you as the result of the work of a lot of simple-minded folks. It has been facetiously maligned; silly references have been made to the underlying philosophy of this bill as though it should have no room in the conferences of sensible men.

Every business presents different circumstances. This is a serious crisis in the history of small business, when something must be done. Both of the major parties in the last national conventions—and they will, I believe, in the next ones—pointed directly to this problem as one of the major problems. The crisis is here.

SENATOR ELLENDER SAID:

I would like to emphasize these facts. This bill will stay the destruction of independent small businessmen in the tire industry. It does not treat with the competition of the large corporate chains about which the independents also submitted evidence of their destructive pricing policies. However as I have stated to you previously, our committee felt that the corporate chain type of distribution required further comprehensive study by our committee and would probably require a different legislative approach if it is found that any is necessary.

This legislation will go a long way to preserve free, private enterprise in the tire industry and to prevent the further advancement of monopolistic control of the manufacturing and sale and servicing of rubber tires. The bill will benefit an estimated 300,000 independent small businessmen engaged in this type of business. This number not only includes the tire dealer, but the tire retreader, the filling station, the automotive supply stores, the automobile dealer, and the garage operator.

The bill does no injury to anyone by taking the manufacturer out of the business of retailing tires. The evidence shows that, as I have said, the entry of the manufacturers into the ownership and operation of retail stores is economically unsound and represents huge losses to them which have to be absorbed some place else in their operation. The manufacturers will continue to manufacture tires. They will continue to make their manufacturing profit unimpaired by the losses which they now must absorb in the operation of their retail stores. It is difficult sometimes to understand why business executives will plunge headlong into uneconomic practices from which very often they find it impossible to extricate themselves. The evidence before our committee supports the fact that this is the case in the tire industry.

SENATOR WHERRY SAID:

You can put thirty or fifty thousand dollars in a place and be at the mercy of one of the larger companies if they want to control or cancel the contract. All large rubber company contracts provide the cancellation provision within 30 days' notice. Some of them have taken advantage of retail dealers. An independent retail dealer can work his fingernails off to establish a business and at the end of 30 days it is gone. This is too much power. Are you telling me that that is freedom of enterprise? It is because of such power that centralization of business has developed in this country so that now less than 100 large companies do 70 per cent of the business of this country, and if we permit such centralization to continue there will be a limited field of private enterprise in this country.

What the big companies ought to do is to see to it that the retailer does survive. I can give you instances where the retailer has developed a big business, and a large company will come in and kick him out with a 30-day notice and take over a profitable business. This is not freedom of enterprise; this is absolute control of private enterprise.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY says:

Without this legislation the independent tire dealer is doomed. . . . These major companies are not limited in their ambition to monopolize the tire business. NOW they are reaching out to compete with the independent clothing merchant, the hardware store, the sporting goods store, the electric store, the department store. Thus, they are contributing to the destruction of the small merchants in other lines. . . . If the small businessman is destroyed, we undermine the very fundamental of our system of free enterprise.

Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER says:

The companies (major tire makers) not only manufacture automobile tires which they sell to others, but they have stores throughout the country, so they compete with the same people who buy from them wholesale. I do not think that is right. That is the reason why this bill is here today.

Senator JAMES M. MEAD says:

Whether they (the major tire makers) have a motive or not, they ultimately are going to take over the retail field wherever they locate; and if they are sustaining that system at a loss, they are sustaining it at a loss having in mind the time when they will maintain it at a profit.

Senator ROBERT A. TAFT says:

The justification for this bill, as a permanent measure, is on the ground of preventing monopoly. I do not think it is against the American way of life, or anything of that sort. In the packer case, the packers—the Supreme Court has said that under the Sherman Act they cannot sell at retail themselves.

Senator KENNETH S. WHERRY says:

The destructive pricing policies of the major corporations continue to destroy the independents' profit margins upon which their survival must depend.

Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN says:

When our sons come back from the war they must know that they have not fought in vain, that our Government has not permitted big business interests to prosper by choking off small business, and that our sons will find their place in the business world. The passage of this Bill is part of the planning.

Congressman WALTER C. PLOESER says:

This legislation is designed to help many thousands. Every operator of an automobile and truck should be vitally interested. The committees want public, as well as legislative, support of their efforts. Who has served better—who is more typical of American free competitive enterprise—than the independent?

Chittenden Burial to Be At Arlington

Services will be held Wednesday at 2 p. m., at Fort Meyer Chapel, for Joe D. Chittenden, 54, of 2607 Pocomoke ave., Arlington, Va., who died yesterday at Mount Alto Hospital. For ten years he had been national service bureau director for the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Burial in the National Cemetery

Born in Hornell, N. Y., in January, 1890, Mr. Crittenden spent his early life in New York State, later moving with his parents to Sanford, Fla. In August, 1917, he enlisted with the Florida National Guard, his company becoming part of the 168th Infantry of the Forty-Second (Rainbow) Division. He went overseas in April, 1918.

After being wounded the following July, Mr. Crittenden was invalided home and was honorably discharged at Fort McPherson, Ga. after 2½ years of hospitalization.

Since his discharge, Mr. Chittenden had been actively affiliated with service organizations in rehabilitation work. For five years he headed the State of Florida rehabilitation office. Since then he served both with the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. He also is a member of the Disabled American Veterans, the Military Order of the Purple Heart and the Rainbow Division Veterans Association.

He is survived by his wife, Ruth Jones Chittenden; a daughter, Mrs. C. B. Hall, both of Arlington, Va., a son, Joe, jr., of the United States Army Air Corps at Tucson, Ariz.; two sisters, Laura and Edna Chittenden of Sanford, Fla., and two brothers, Ned Chittenden of Pinellas Park, Fla., and LeRoy P. Chittenden of Arlington.

George R. Nicholson

The funeral of George Richard Nicholson, 47, farmer and trucker, who died at his home at Boyds, Md., on Friday, will take place at the home at 2 p. m. today. The Rev. James P. Kerr, pastor of the Boyds Presbyterian Church at Boyds, will conduct the services and burial will be in the church cemetery.

Mr. Nicholson, who was a lifelong resident of the Boyds neighborhood, is survived by his wife, Mrs. Naomi R. Nicholson, formerly Miss Knill of Barnesville, Md., two daughters, Jacqueline and Mildred Nicholson, and a son, Stanley Nicholson, all of Boyds; two sisters, Mrs. James Birch, Dickerson, Md., and Mrs. Norman Bellison, Damascus, Md.; four brothers, Samuel Nicholson, now in the Army; Melvin Nicholson, Travilah, Md., and Earl and Donald Nicholson, both of boyds, and both parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Nicholson, Boyds.

William E. Mantz

William E. Mantz, 50, died unexpectedly of heart disease yesterday morning at his home, 7106 Chatham rd., Chevy Chase, Md. He had not been in good health for a week, but was not confined to his home.

Mr. Mantz was an insurance broker, with offices at 710 14th st. nw., which he had occupied for several years. He was a member of Hamline M. E. Church, 16th and Allison sts. nw.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen S. Mantz; a daughter, Mrs. James B. Fox of 4817 Blagden ave. nw., and a grandson, William A. Fox.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 2 p. m. tomorrow, with burial in Congressional Cemetery.

Joseph Wilmer

Joseph Wilner, 66, veteran of two wars and superintendent of the printing plant at Fort Belvoir for 21 years, died yesterday morning at Mount Alto Hospital. He lived on the Army post.

A veteran of the Spanish-American War, Mr. Wilner also served in the World War and was a member of the Army of Occupation following the Armistice. He was active in the Maj. Gen. Edward's Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and in Masonry.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Josie Witkowski Wilner, a daughter, Mrs. Harry Toltz of Boston, Mass.; a son, Sergt. Marshall Wilner stationed at Tucson, Ariz.; two sisters, Mrs. Annie Bloom, and Mrs. Lottie Frank, and a brother, Ben Wyman, all of Brookline, Mass.

Funeral services will be held at Danzansky's funeral home with Rabbi Gerstenfeld officiating, the time to be announced later. Burial will be in Arlington with Masonic honors.

Mrs. Louise C. Ely

Funeral services for Mrs. Louise Crane Ely, widow of Dr. Charles R. Ely of Gallaudet College for the Deaf, will be held at Hines funeral home tomorrow at 3 p. m. Burial will be at Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mrs. Ely died Saturday at her home, 3378 Stephenson pl. nw., where she lived with a daughter, Mrs. A. D. Studybaker. She was an active worker in the Women's Alliance of All Souls' Unitarian Church and maintained a wide interest in many charities and child welfare organizations.

Besides Mrs. Studybaker, Mrs. Ely is survived by two other daughters, Mrs. Elmer Stewart of Chevy Chase, Md., and Mrs. Robert W. Cushman of Boston.

DYNAFUEL

IS HELPING TO WIN DECISIVE AIR BATTLES

Plane for plane, Allied aircraft are better-built, better-armed and better-manned than anything the Axis can send against them.

Yes, and they're better-fueled, too! The world's finest aviation gasoline is fighting on our side—and Sunoco is making millions of gallons of it every week to highest U. S. Army specifications.

Both the high quality and huge quantity of our output are due largely to Dynafuel—an exclusive development of Sun Oil Company engineers and chemists.

50% More Powerful Than U. S. Standard 100-Octane Test Fuel

Dynafuel is far more than a gasoline. It's a super aviation fuel concentrate, so loaded with dynamic energy that it actually tests 50% higher in power than U. S. standard 100-octane test fuel! It isn't used undiluted but is blended with gasolines made by other methods, in order to step-up their quality.

The Sunoco Dynafuel Process also increases quantity—because it utilizes even those portions of the crude which formerly went only into low-grade fuels.

For Better Motoring—After the War

Dynafuel is not now available for civilians. Every drop is reserved for military needs. But when peace comes, the advanced Sunoco processes and equipment which are contributing so greatly to the war will bring to motorists a new, more powerful fuel for their automobiles.

Industry's Initiative Serves America Well

Dynafuel was developed by Sunoco without government aid or subsidy. We risked our own capital, our own credit, in order to pay the huge costs of building the plants for its production.

This is another example of how individual initiative is helping to win the greatest war of all time—and will inevitably lead the way to better transportation, better living, in post-war America.

U. S. Chamber Opens Drive For WMC Plan

By the Associated Press

The United States Chamber of Commerce opened yesterday an industry-wide drive to achieve better manpower utilization by submitting to 1300 trade associations a War Manp wer Commission program which the chamber called a "practical approach" to the problem.

The WMC progrm, which, Eric A. Johnston, president of the chamber, said, is "strongly recommended," called for:

A report to the WMC on outstanding industrial manpower problems with suggestions for correction; identification and evaluation of measures adopted within the trade or industry resulting in savings or more effective use of manpower, and presentation of such information to the members.

The program was announced after Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower Commission chairman, wrote Johnston that as the nation approaches the total employment of the nation's available manpower in the war effort, the most effective use of workers' time and talent becomes more and more important.

"While maximum utilization can only be attained through the worker-management team, it is the responsibility of management to devise and adopt methods which permit and encourage every worker to contribute his best," McNutt said.

"The U. S. Chamber of Commerce, because of its recognized position as a representative of producing and merchandising management, can be of invaluable assistance in stimulating the active participation in the programs of the Bureau of Manpower Utilization of the War Manpower Commission."

District Pilot Lands His Plane With Wing Missing

Lieut. Edmund R. Devlin wrote his mother, Mrs. Mary A. Devlin, 3112 Rodman st. nw., the other day from somewhere in Italy that "bringing an ailing plane safely down was a wonderful feeling." The "illness from which his plane was suffering at the time was the loss of a left wing which had been shot off.

DEVLIN

Prior to his enlistment in the Army in 1941 he lived at his mother's home in Bethesda, Md., before she moved to the Rodman st. address. Young Devlin attended Central High where he was a member of the diving team.

He received his pilot's wings and commission at Fort Moultrie, Ga., last January and went overseas in May. He was recently made element leader and holds the Air Medal and two Oak Leaf Clusters. His foreign combat experience includes service in Africa, Sicily and Italy.

Herbert P. Galliher

Funeral services for Herbert P. Galliher, 50, of 201 Cedar ave., Takoma Park, Md., lumber dealer, who died late Saturday at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, following an illness of several weeks, will be held tomorrow at 11 a. m. at the Hines funeral home, with interment in Rock Creek Cemetery.

GALLIHER

He was a native of the District, son of the late William T. Galliher and A. Laura Galliher. He attended Business High School and became associated with the W. T. Galliher & Bro. lumber company, of which his father was co-founder. For 30 years he was identified with the lumber business in Washington and in Asheville, N. C. and was president of the firm bearing his name in Arlington.

Surviving are his wife, the former Miss Anna M. Finch, the daughter of the late D. M. Finch, postmaster of Takoma Park, whom he married in 1915; a son, Lieut. Herbert P. Galliher, jr., USA, serving overseas; a daughter, Susan Jane Galliher, a student at Mt. Holyoke College; two brothers, William G. Galliher, of Washington, and Merrill P. Galliher, of Memphis, Tenn.; and five sisters, Mrs. L. Perry West and Mrs. Watts T. Estabrook, both of Washington, Mrs. Albert W. Ayre of Arlington, Va., Mrs. Joseph H. Siebert, of Alexandria, Va., and Mrs. Mildred G. Clifford, of Elizabeth, N.J.

Butler's Charges

Nye to Press Latin Nations' Investigation

By the Associated Press

A two-pronged checkup on Uncle Sam's dealings with his Latin-American neighbors is in the making as a result of the bitterly disputed charges of Senator Butler (Republican) of Nebraska that the United States is being played for a profligate sucker.

Republican members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, headed by Senator Nye of North Dakota, plan to enlarge the scope of an inquiry the committee ordered into lend-lease operations to take special account of Butler's charges that this Government has obligated more than six billion dollars for spending in Central and South American countries.

The Byrd economy committee already has ordered an inquiry into operations carried on in Latin America by Nelson Rockefeller, coordinator of inter-American affairs, and the chairman, Senator Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia, said this investigation will be widened later to include other agencies.

Butler's charges that the Latin-Americans are taking our money and laughing at us brought a speedy reply from Vice President Wallace, who apologized for the "slur" he said the Nebraskan had cast on some of the Latin-American governments.

He said, however, that the six billion dollars covered a projected three-year program and included loans as well as actual grants and U. S. Government outlays.

He said that in obtaining the figure he had been obliged to get them from individual agencies, adding that of course there was room for error in such methods. He complained, however, that no one agency had information on what others were doing, asserting that more than 40 bureaus were active in Latin American countries.

He took sharp issue with Senator McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee of the Appropriations Committee, who told the Senate last week that a total of $2,207,000,000 had been spent in South America.

Test of Interpretation Proves Szigeti Great Violin Artist

By Ray C. B. Brown

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents Joseph Szigeti in a violin recital Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Assisting pianist: Andor Foldes. Program: Concerto in D minor (Tartini), Chaconne (Bach), Sonata in A major (Franck), Rondo in D major (Schubert), Stempenyu Suite (Achron), Improvisation (Kabalevski), Polka (Shostakovich), Masques (Prokofiev), Russian Dance (Stravinski).

At his last previous appearance in Constitution Hall as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Joseph Szigeti dazzled the ears with his virtuosic performance of a diabolically difficult concerto by Prokofiev. Yesterday he devoted the first part of his recital to restrained and beautifully sensitive playing that gave the deepest satisfaction to those who appreciate spirituality in musicianship. Once an artist has established technical mastery, opinions about his relative greatness must be based upon the qualities of mind applied to the technique. Virtuosity alone is a brilliance devoid of meaning, but when used in the service of interpretation is the test of the artist's character. By that test Szigeti is a great artist.

Interpretation was his sole concern in his fine arrangement of an unfamiliar concerto in D minor by Giuseppe Tartini, the Bach chaconne and the Franck sonata. The simple diatonic music of Tartini did not plumb depths of meaning, but it was performed with such an exact sense of proportion and such perfect modeling of phrase as to sound significant. The Bach chaconne, that unparalleled soliloquy for violin, was read with refinements of dynamics, delicacies of accents and a leashed power more effective than rolling rhetoric. As for the Franck sonata, I have never heard a more understanding and eloquent revelation of its spiritual message. The playing was penetrant and subtle, touching the core of mysticism in Franck's music. Szigeti's collaborator in this reading, Andor Foldes, was admirably consentient in balancing the piano tone with the nuances of the violin's lyricism.

Friedberg's transcription of Schubert's rondo in D major had in itself no particular merit, and served as a harmless foil for the "Stempenyu" suite by the late Joseph Achron, an interesting three-movement novelty pervaded by regional atmosphere. Who Stempenyu may be is a question for folklorists to answer, but he seems to have been a fiddler with a gypsy style. The themes and harmonies may be derived from Achron's native Lithuania, yet there were Hebraic interals now and then pointing to another locale.

In the final group, given over to feats of legerdemain with the strings and bow, were combined on improvisation by Kabalevski, and transcriptions of the "Once in Geneva Polka" by Shostakovich "Masques" from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" and the Russian dnace from Stravinski's "Petrushka."

Richard Horner Bales conducts the National Gallery Sinfonietta on Sunday night in the National Gallery of Art. Soloist: Julia Mueller. Program: A Trumpet Voluntary (Purcell-Bales), Viola Concerto in B minor (Handel), Symphony in A major, K. V. 201 (Mozart) Two Impressions of an Animated Cartoon (Bales), Nocturne for Viola (Kennan), Paratroops (Kubik), Overture to 'Egmont'' (Beethoven).

To the east garden court of the National Gallery of Art, the Sinfonietta that bears its name returned last evening to give a concert enjoyed by the usual crowded audience. Richard Horner Bales conducted a program containing a premiere and two local first performances as well as such recognizable items as Mozart's A major symphony of the year 1773 and Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. The soloist was Julia Mueller, a new member of the viola section of the National Symphony Orchestra.

Bales began with his own effective arrangement of Purcell's "Trumpet Voluntary" for organ. This was the prelude to a viola concerto in B minor by Handel in which Miss Mueller proved herself a technically facile player with a warm and ingratiating tone. This concerto, too, was possibly a first performance here, although it was not so listed. Certainly it is not one of Handel's overworked compositions, and it had a refreshing way of presenting his characteristic ways with a broad and moving andante movement set between two irresistibly lively allegros.

In the second part of the concert Bales offered the premiere of a musical jest which he calls "Two Impressions of an Animted Cartoon." Using dissonance for the sake of its comic impact he has written a clever and genuinely humorous piece descriptive of a Walt Disney character who is a novice in equitation. Miss Mueller made her second appearance in a nocturne by Kent Kennan, which is a lovely bit of imaginative writing by a young American composer when a gift for using harmony in the poetic way. Modernism was strongly to the fore also in Gail Kubik's "Paratroops," a concert version of film music heard here for the first time. Apart from the film, it naturally does not make the same points that it would when related to visible action, but the music is powerful and dramatic, and has atmospheric qualities.

NAVY DEPARTMENT
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS
WASHINGTON
August 24th, 1943

From: Vice Chief of Naval Operations.
To: The Master, Officers and Crew of the Tanker [redacted]*.
Via: The Administrator, War Shipping Administration.

Subj: Tanker Turnaround in United Kingdom.

1. The exceptional performance of the tanker [redacted]* while discharging in United Kingdom ports recently has been brought to the attention of the Navy Department.

2. It is noted that your vessel discharged her entire deck cargo of boxed planes in 8 hours, then shifted to another dock where you discharged your entire cargo of bulk oil in 18 hours.

3. The highest credit is given to the wholehearted cooperation and efforts of the vessel's personnel, who gave up their normal shore leave privileges in order that this commendable performance could be accomplished, thereby permitting the vessel to sail in a returning convoy days ahead of that thought possible. This accomplishment shows most clearly that you realize and are giving effect to the importance of prompt turnaround as being the equivalent of having additional ships in service.

4. It is with pleasure that I am requesting the War Shipping Administration to send a copy of this letter to the owners (Pan American Petroleum and Transport Company) of your fine ship, because I know that they will share my feeling of pride in the job you have done and are doing.

5. In behalf of the Navy Department, I welcome this opportunity to express my appreciation and commendation for your accomplishment, which may well serve as an ideal of morale and spirit for the U. S. Merchant Marine in the performance of their important duties in contributing to winning the war. I am sure that I can find no better expression than that used by the U. S. Navy — "Well Done".

J. H. Horne

This is the Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal awarded to the Master of this tanker for the heroic rescue of 27 United Nations' seamen from the raging seas of the North Atlantic.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEN WHO GET THE OIL THROUGH

Oil IS the lifeblood of war! Without it no ship, plane or tank can go out and fight.

That's where our heroic men of the tanker service of the Merchant Marine come in.

Read this letter from the Vice-Chief of Naval Operations, Vice-Admiral F. J. Horne to the Master, Officers and Crew of the Pan American Petroleum and Transport Company Tanker [redacted]*.

As you read it, think of the tanker's trip over. Think of the all-day and all-night watches. Think of the icy death of the North Atlantic. Think of muscle and brain so war weary . . . that another hour would be too much.

Our Merchant Marine men pitched in . . . unloaded their ship in record time . . . so they could rush back for another cargo.

Salute these men, fellow Americans . . . these men who are pledged to get the precious oil through at any cost.

Salute them, and all the men in the heroic tanker service . . . salute their day-in and day-out bravery and devotion to duty!

In the book of records of fighting men winning this war, write the name "Tankerman, U. S. Merchant Marine" . . . and write it high up on the page!

Colombia Joins

Colombia's recognition of a state of belligerency with Germany brings her into a goodly company of her neighbors. All but one of the American republics have severed relations with Hitler's Reich. Fourteen of them, including the United States, are now directly taking part, in accordance with their resources and abilities, in the overthrow of Naziism. Although Colombia has not made an actual declaration of war against Germany, her Foreign Minister has indicated that his country's participation at the side of the United Nations will be active rather than passive. The solidarity of the Western Hemisphere is growing.

The immediate occasion for the step taken by Colombia was the sinking of a second ship flying her flag by a German submarine. It was a provocation which emphasized dramatically how linked are the interests of all nations in the restoration of international order and security. The promptness with which the Colombian government reacted to the Nazi attack is a pretty clear sign that the people of that country long ago ceased to be neutral in spirit toward the world conflict. There could scarcely be a more fitting answer to the slurs which Senator Butler recently cast upon the good relations among the American republics.

Colombia is a valued addition to the United Nations cause. As the South American country closest to the Panama Canal, she can be counted upon to augment the protection of that vital link between the Atlantic and the Pacific. She will undoubtedly help to make the Caribbean extremely hazardous for U-boats. The neighborly ties between her people and our own will be strengthened by this association in a joint effort.

Subsidy Compromise

Senator Taft is to be congratulated for his determination to fight for the rule of reason in the subsidy squabble. That decision will probably bring a shower of brickbats from the hundred percenters on both sides. But it will also put him in the position of a spokesman for the national interest. For this is an issue that must be compromised to avoid runaway inflation on one hand and reckless waste of Government funds on the other.

The necessity of a compromise if the national interest is to be served appears to us to be self-evident. There is no secret as to why the farmers prefer higher prices to incentive subsidies. For a decade they have leaned heavily upon the Government for help to keep them out of depression. Now they see an opportunity, however ephemeral it may be, to get out from under the system of Federal controls. They hope that, by boosting prices to figures that will bring them good profits, they can throw off regimentation in the postwar era. Subsidies tend to frustrate these hopes, so they have suddenly become very distasteful to farmers.

Now even if these illusory hopes of the farmer were well founded, the Government would still be under obligation to keep a checkrein on agricultural prices. For its primary concern must be stabilization of our entire economy and not merely approval of prices favorable to the farmer. And such stabilization is not likely to be achieved or sustained if the House bill banning the use of all subsidies to aid the OPA and the WFA should become law. Clearly, then, the national interest, which at bottom is also the interest of the farmer, demands the limited use of subsidies to carry us through this emergency.

On the other hand, the pressure for enormous subsidies of the rollback type is coming chiefly from organized labor. Subsidies that merely put more money into the bulging pockets of consumers have much the same effect as higher wages. In that respect they are highly inflationary. Subsidies of this sort must be rigidly limited to protect the public interest in a stable economy. On this basis, apparently, Senator Taft proposes to work out his compromise. He would wisely cling to the basic public interest as against the pressure groups standing at opposite extremes on this issue.

We think that Senator Taft goes too far in suggesting that all rollback subsidies now in effect be discontinued, unsound though they are in principle. The effect would be to upset stabilization efforts and to stimulate greater demands for wage increases. The inflationary threat is so grave that nothing which tends to fan the flames can be considered sound national policy. But the details of the compromise to be worked out are less important at the moment than the fact that a thoughtful legislator is trying to draw a practical distinction between subsidies that are helpful and subsidies that are harmful. We are loath to think that the Senate will reject this common-sense approach if Senator Taft and a few of his colleagues make the issue unmistakably clear.

World Communications

We can think of few more vital buttresses to the world order that is now in the making than an international communications system. It is idle to speak of world-wide understanding and good will if the peoples of different countries have no established means of communicating with each other at reasonable rates. The freedom of communications within the United States should make us the first to realize the necessity of circling the globe with cables and radio channels accessible to all nations.

The country is deeply indebted to Chairman James L. Fly of the Federal Communications Commission for injecting this important issue into the current discussion of the postwar world. Along with many others, we missed the full significance of Mr. Fly's address a week ago. Since we have had an opportunity to read his thoughtful and meaty remarks, however, we are confident that the FCC chairman has outlined a problem that will claim a prominent place in the peace conferences.

It is scarcely necessary to emphasize how mistrust among nations feeds upon lack of information. Mr. Fly quotes the London Times as saying in 1861, "We nearly went to war with America because we had not a telegraph across the Atlantic." Cooperation among the United Nations when the war is over will require much more than meetings of statesmen and the passage of messages between governments. The American people will want to know what is happening in China, Russia, India, Australia and many other countries. We hope that the peoples of those lands will want to know what we are doing and thinking. To deny easy and inexpensive transmission of news, commercial messages and personal communications would be to cripple the movement toward a oneness of feeling on which the peace of the world seems to rest. Yet that is precisely what will happen unless we and our allies have the foresight to create a world communications system.

"We have yet to chart both the principles and the mechanics which will adequately provide for that essential exchange of intelligence among all peoples," said Mr. Fly. The problem was raised at Versailles in 1919 through a memorandum prepared for President Wilson by Walter S. Rogers. But nothing was accomplished. Consequently, communication systems across boundary lines and oceans have been developed largely to serve national and imperial interests. War finally forced the establishment of direct radio circuits between the United States and Australia, but this service is limited to the duration of the war and it still carries the old discriminatory rate of 58 cents a word, compared to 30 cents a word between Australia and Canada. Similar conditions prevail in various other instances.

What the world obviously needs is a communication system comparable to that now serving the nations within the British Commonwealth. The first step for this country to take, Mr. Fly points out, is consolidation of American international carriers into a single system so that they will be better able to deal with monopolies owned or backed by other governments. South American facilities must be freed from Axis influence, and local properties might well be restored to control by local governments. "Our consistent aim," he says, "must be the unfettered flow of communications."

To accomplish this aim the FCC chairman has outlined four basic principles: (1) There should be uniform rates for all messages throughout the world, with no discrimination anywhere. (2) These rates should be low to encourage communication. (3) Instantaneous radio communications between all important areas of the globe should be sought, with perhaps an electronic "conveyor belt" in the equatorial zone to conserve frequencies. (4) Uniform and low press rates should extend throughout the world. Here is a program that should command widespread support at the peace conference. We missed an opportunity, as Mr. Fly has pointed out, at Versailles. In the interest of world unity as well as our own relations with other countries, we must exercise a more vigorous leadership in this field when the present conflict is over.

That So-Called Joker

Section 112 of the House tax bill requiring an annual financial accounting from tax-exempt organizations, excepting religious, educational and charitable groups, is coming in for a lot of attention since President Green of the AFL belatedly became aware of its existence. Representative Knutson has taken The Post to task for referring to this controversial provision of the bill as a "sleeper" or "joker." He points out that members of the Ways and Means Committee had clearly indicated the purpose of the provision in public hearings and explained that it would require a financial accounting from trade unions. Nevertheless, section 112 somehow managed to escape the limelight and came through with so little publicity that Mr. Green, in a letter of protest addressed to Representative McCormack, called it a tax bill "joker." Whether justified or not, this invidious designation has had the advantage of bringing an obscure provision to public attention.

As stated in an editorial last Saturday, The Post believes that the proper place for demanding a financial accounting from labor unions would be in a comprehensive regulatory measure. Nevertheless, the Ways and Means Committee has made out a very strong case for asking an accounting from certain tax-exempt organizations, including chambers of commerce, fraternal societies and cooperatives as well as labor unions. Its ostensible purpose is to determine whether these privileged organizations are conducting businesses that compete unfairly with taxable concerns. There is ample warrant for an investigation of this sort to ascertain whether changes in existing exemptions are desirable. Whether the committee had ulterior motives in requesting such information is immaterial. The demand for an accounting is legitimate, and in the opinion of Representative Knutsor it should have been made 20 or 30 years ago.

Immunity from even the mildest public supervision of their financial affairs can no longer be effectively defended by labor organizations that have acquired a public status as bargaining agencies and are in a position not only to request but also to exact toll from workers. Indeed, the rank and file of union members ought to welcome a form of publicity that would afford them some protection against exorbitant exactions, and responsible union executives should be willing and glad to furnish such data. Publicity within reason alarms only people who have something to conceal.

Farming Comes High

With farm income at the highest level ever enjoyed by American farmers, it is small wonder that a boom is under way in farmland values. The Department of Agriculture's national index of the average per acre value of farm real estate and improvements on July 1 was 23 per cent above the 1935-39 base and is estimated to have risen another 4 per cent as of November 1. The Post took note of this trend with misgivings some months ago. It contains the seeds of another depression as disastrous to farmers as the one which flowered from the land boom of the last war.

There is good reason to believe that current values placed on agricultural land are a good deal higher than they should be on the basis of the land's long-term earning power. They stem from the fact that the average net income of farmers this year will be about three times as great as it was in 1939. But this rate of income cannot be sustained indefinitely. When it diminishes, farmers who bought land on borrowed funds may find themselves unable to pay off their indebtedness. Others are liable to find themselves saddled with land yielding inadequate returns on their investment. The result may be a further concentration of agriculture in the hands of a comparatively small number of large commercial farms and a progressive disinheritance of family-farm units.

The trend imposes a particular hardship upon farmers who are now in the armed services. Not only are they deprived of any share in the war-boom prices but they are likely to find, when the war is over, that they will be unable to purchase land at inflated values. James Patton of the National Farmers Union has suggested a corrective for this condition which certainly merits consideration. He proposes that the Government appropriate five million dollars to develop a veterans' farm program on the tenant-purchase pattern and to option, beginning immediately, farm lands to be available after the war for men as they are discharged from the armed forces. Such an optioning of land would help to prevent rural inflation and would be an effective step toward rehabilitation of soldiers who want to get back to the farm.

War 'Savings'

The so-called 13 billion dollars of War Department "savings" recently announced by the chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee are not what they seem to be. Budget Director Smith says that the 13 billion dollar reserve set up by the department reflects in part savings already taken into account in the August revision of estimated expenditures for the current fiscal year and in part a reduction in expenditures of previous or future fiscal years. Hence deduction of this reserve fund from present estimates of expenditures for the current fiscal year would be a very wrong-headed procedure. It appears, however, that estimates of the over-all war program—not simply outlays by the War Department—are being revised downward. War expenditures for the current fiscal year are now expected to total 92 billion dollars, i. e. eight billion dollars less than the August estimate. This downward revision of estimated outlays combined with an upward revision of estimated revenues of about three billions cuts the estimated deficit by 11 billion dollars.

It is comforting to know that spending is not outstripping tax receipts to the extent anticipated. But even on the basis of revised estimates, the deficit for this fiscal year is expected to reach the formidable total of 57 billion dollars. This means that more than 50 cents of every dollar spent by the Government will have to be borrowed. The record throws into high relief the pitiful inadequacy of a tax bill calling for only two billions of new revenue.

WARPLANE

Bird without song, whose wings never rest,
With plumage of steel and a flame in your breast;
Falcon of Mars, whose prey and whose plunder
Are glory and sorrow all over the world;
Bombs fill your entrails, your heartbeat is thunder,
Lucifer laughed when your pinions unfurled,
Bird without mate, but a passion to kill,
Whence comes your furious cunning and skill?
What forces kindle your intricate brains
To conquer your quarry—the Jap and the Hun?
O pitiful answer and heartbreaking wonder:
They are my lover—my hero—my son.

Soldier Voting

By Mark Sullivan

Complex Process

THE SENATE spent a full day last week trying to work out a plan by which soldiers can vote next year. They did not finish, and will resume this week. Even after the Senate concludes, there will be later action in the House, where a bill for an alternative plan has been introduced.

The Senate has found this measure to be one of the most complex tasks that ever faced a legislative body. We say, glibly, that of course the soldiers (and others in the armed forces) must have an opportunity to vote. From that, practically nobody dissents. Study of the situation emphasizes the desirability. Imagine a closely contested presidential election, attended with emotional bitterness. And imagine the feeling that might arise, the charges and recriminations, if a President were elected by a narrow majority—with some 10 million voters having been deprived of their suffrage by the fact that the Government had ordered them into the Army. Decidedly, the persons in the armed services should have a chance to vote. But to set up a mechanism by which they actually can vote raises problems extremely difficult to solve.

ALL OUR ELECTION machinery is in the hands of the States. Elections are exclusively a State function. The function is carried on by local officials, in counties and election precincts. Forty-six of the States have provisions for absentee voting, but two have not. Even in some States where the laws provide for absentee voting, the details are such as not to take care of soldiers abroad.

In many States, absentee voting involves a double process. The voter must first write to the Capital of his State and apply for a ballot. The State government must check the applicant's qualifications and then send a ballot. Thereafter the absentee voter must fill out his ballot and return it. For each of these steps, there is a date, a time limit. The whole process is too cumbersome, and the time fixed is too short, to accommodate men overseas in camps or on battle fronts, or otherwise difficult to reach. If the voting of soldiers next year were left to the absentee voting laws of the States—as these laws now stand—few soldiers could vote. Actually, in the congressional elections of 1942 only some 28,000 soldiers voted—something like one in 200 of the whole number in the armed forces.

THE IDEAL THING would be to have the State Legislatures change their absentee voting regulations so as to enable soldiers to vote, including action by the two States, Delaware and Kentucky, which do not now have absentee voting. This method is strongly pressed by some in Congress. Their motive is a wish to keep voting and elections a State function, exclusively, as they now are. They fear that any step taken by the Federal Government to facilitate soldier voting might include possible invasion of the States' exclusive function.

But if doing it wholly by States is ideal, it has practical handicaps. Probably in some States, special sessions of the Legislature would need to be held. Uniformity of method adopted by all the States would be difficult to achieve, and if the method were not uniform, it would throw a heavy burden on the Army and Navy. Nevertheless, those who wish to keep the hands of the Federal Government off all matters having to do with voting and elections insist that action by the States is the only way. In the Senate or House or both, determined effort will be made to this end.

THE BILL now under debate in the Senate goes on the assumption that in bringing about universal voting by soldiers abroad there must be some action by the Federal Government—even if the Federal action be limited to transporting ballots abroad, distributing them to the soldiers, collecting them, and returning them to the United States. This, at least, must be a Federal function, because the soldiers are under control of the Federal Government. On the other hand, those who favor action by the States exclusively say that the Army and Navy can attend to the transportation and distribution of ballots.

Those who hold that the Federal Government cannot avoid having some part in the process say that the function of the States can be safeguarded. First, by leaving to the States just as much as possible of the process of soldier voting, strictly limiting the part to be played by the Federal Government. Second, by providing carefully that whatever the Federal Government does shall be a war measure only, and be limited in time to six months after the end of hostilities. Making it a war measure would meet the problem of constitutionality. In any event, the task is one of extreme complexity and infinite refinement.

Gilbert Strategy

By Paul Schubert

Naval Offensive

THE GILBERT Islands are valuable to us in their own right. This global war is primarily a war of communication lines—the various combat fronts are only as strong as the material that can be fed to them. Anything that shortens communication lines adds to the offensive potential that can be built up at the fronts, and thus heightens the blows that can be delivered.

The fact that the Gilbert Islands were in Japanese hands forced us to detour south of them—to keep beyond air striking distance of the airdrome on Tarawa. Taking these islands removes the necessity for this detour—shortens the line between the United States and the Southwest Pacific front.

Taking these islands also extends the offensive air power we are able to wield in our mid-Pacific naval and aerial warfare against the Japanese.

The Gilbert Island blow at Japan is just serious enough to "hurt" the Japanese enemy, and to provoke countermeasures.

It seems very likely that, important as the Gilberts themselves are, the provocation of countermeasures was the true ultimate goal of our attack. For the time has now come when a new series of large-scale naval actions would be most welcome to us.

FUNDAMENTALLY, we face these actions with great confidence, convinced that we can repeat last year's victories. Beyond that, we are realists enough to want to know, at this stage of the war, whether our confidence is fully justified, or whether the Japanese have any surprises to spring on us. The answer to this question is very important to our planning for 1944.

Our naval war with Japan is a contest in three weapons; (1) The airplane carrier (including its aircraft); (2) The gun (including its control system); and (3) The ship-launched torpedo.

The ship-launched torpedo is largely used as the weapon of the submarine, and for purposes of the present discussion will be disregarded.

As for the carrier, both the Japanese and ourselves had done much experiment, before the war, in developing the battle punch of this naval innovation. Both of us had brought the torpedo plane to a high degree of effectiveness. Both of us had developed dive-bombing as a screen for the torpedo plane attack. Both of us had spent much effort in perfecting aiming devices for high-level bombing.

Both of us expected much of our carriers, though it is doubtful that either of us anticipated just how deadly the "flat tops" would be. Both of us learned immediately that they had knockout potentialities. Each acquired such respect for the other's carriers, that the carrier became the No. 1 target for attack, with the result that the early rounds of the Pacific naval war turned into a murderous carrier slugging match.

NEITHER JAPAN nor ourselves had true carrier strength, in numbers—not nearly the strength we should have liked. By the time 1942 was two-thirds gone, we had each lost more than we could afford at the time . . . to all intents and purposes, the carrier was temporarily eliminated from the naval war. What advantage remained, lay on the side of the United States.

At this point the carrier equation became an equation in the ability to build new carriers.

For the only thing that can stop a carrier is a carrier. The side that has a number of carriers left over, after all the opponent's carriers are gone, is going to have compelling superiority in future fleet actions, and will very likely win a victory of annihilation.

Let us assume, purely for purposes of argument, that the United States and Japan build carriers of equal striking power. Let us assume that during one year, Japan builds 10, while the United States builds 20. Let us assume that the fleets then join battle, and that we sink Japan's 10 carriers by expending 10 of our own carriers. At that point we still have 10 carriers left, while Japan has none—and using our 10 carriers without Japanese aerial opposition, we proceed to destroy all Japanese capital ships at sea in the area.

It is possible that the invasion of the Gilberts is really a challenge to Japan to come to sea with the present Japanese carrier equipment, and slug it out with the present American carrier equipment—in the expectation that such a situation will result.

After the carriers were eliminated, last year, the Japanese showed considerable willingness to fight with guns—willingness to fight, too, in night gun duels.

Here there was no question of equality. The series of naval gunfights fought in Solomon Islands waters, saw marked American naval superiority in all branches of day and night gun duelling.

Since those fights, the Japanese fleet has avoided action. The presumption is that they are trying to improve their gun installations before fighting again. Here, too, we are ready for a new trial of strength. The future of the Pacific War will be determined by the naval question.

Rabies Scare

Not for the purpose of becoming involved in a controversy with Virginia W. Sargent, president of the Animal Protective Association, but merely to state the plain facts regarding the so-called "rabies scare," I submit the following remarks in reply to her letter in The Washington Post, November 12, 1943.

It happens that I have seen two persons die from rabies. One was an elderly woman who was bitten by her own dog, but who, unfortunately, followed the eighteenth century trend of thought that her dog "never could have rabies because it is such a nice dog." The other victim was a 6-year-old boy, bitten by a stray dog. He had not informed his parents and was stricken while attending school. He died late the next day.

One case of rabies in a city which apparently has no workable laws governing household pets should be considered with extreme seriousness, the preachings of the Animal Protective Association notwithstanding. To date we have had dozens of cases of rabies.

Perhaps one dog in a thousand is infected with rabies, but if any one dog of that thousand bites your child you will take him to a physician for the nerve-wracking Pasteur treatment.

The fact is that there are rabies epidemics in Washington, in Maryland, in Virginia. There is only one remedy—impounding of all stray dogs and death for those animals that must prowl the alleys and the garbage dumps—animals that are perfect targets for rabies because of their wanderings; animals that are better off dead than attacking innocent persons who are thoughtless enough to think that the "kind" appearance of a dog makes him immune to rabies.

Republican Party

The Republican Party has been making a lot of noise about what they would do if they got into office nationally next year. But I fail to see any sort of plan, so far, or any semblance of a national organization that represents the party, or which has either of those magic attributes—cash or candidate.

Many of us who are in the service will want to vote for the party with the best program and the best candidate next year, and contrary to the wishes of a few Senators, we will do just that. Looking at the picture from the bottom of the heap, jobs gone, salaries reduced, far from home and the obligations of local political ties, we will be singularly free to vote our minds. T/S R. F. ALLEN.

Minority Filibuster

Naturally we regret very much that a paper of your wide influence should come out in opposition to the legislative method of abolishing the poll tax in favor of a constitutional amendment.

We feel sure, however, that we can both agree on this fact—that it is unfair and undemocratic and contrary to all the principles for which this war is being fought that the Senate of the United States should be kept from voting on the merits of the antipoll tax bill by a minority filibuster. The principle of minority suppression of the majority is fundamentally contrary to the whole tradition of American life. In our opinion, it is of the utmost importance that the issue of the filibuster and the need for invoking cloture should be clearly understood and hammered home to the people.

If you are in agreement with this position—and we feel sure that, with your tradition of fairness, you are—you would be doing a great service in bringing it before the public.

Lebanon Incident

The people of Lebanon never wanted or needed the French mandate imposed upon them since the last war. When the victorious Allies started to divide the small nations into "spheres of influence," France insisted on having Syria and Lebanon under her mandate. The Lebanese people refused and revolted and asked if the protection of a great power is inevitable they would rather have the United States or Great Britain. Great Britain had already taken Palestine and Iraq and our Government declined the invitation because of our policy of non-involvement in other peoples' affairs, so the French asked and received the mandate over Lebanon and Syria to counterbalance that of Great Britain.

The United States Government, as one of the two principals of the Atlantic Charter, has a direct interest and responsibility to use its good offices to settle the Lebanese problem to the satisfaction of the national aspirations of Lebanon. If the United States takes advantage of the present opportunity of settling this case this country will win the good will and gratitude of the peoples of the Near and Middle East.

Paul Claudel

CORONAL, by Paul Claudel. Rendered into English by Sister Mary David, S. S. N. D. (Patheon Press, $2.75.)

M. Paul Claudel is well remembered by Americans as one of the ablest Ambassadors ever sent to Washington by the late Republic of France, but as the most distinguished of living French poets he is scarcely known to us at all. There are various reasons why this is so, apart from the fact that not all his poetical work has been translated.

Perhaps the main reason is that we should have much difficulty in understanding him, for there is nobody quite like Claudel in the whole great range of English poetry. To get something like an analogy one would have to imagine a composite of Coventry Patmore, Francis Thompson and the earlier Yeats; even so the analogy would be highly defective. In some ways Claudel's spirit seems closer to Dostoievski than to any of those.

M. Claudel's poetry is, though in manner rather than theme, in more or less direct descent from Verlaine's and Rimbaud's, and one is thus free to label it "symbolist" or "decadent," according to taste or prejudice. The point is that, although its origins can be traced (through Baudelaire) to an American, Poe, symbolist poetry has never found much favor or understanding here. The French decadent tradition was primarily a revolt against the bourgeois-liberal genius of the nineteenth century. In Baudelaire and Verlaine it was a repudiation of the philistine moralities—those tormented spirits, who had looked close at Evil, knew too well the hollowness and hypocrisy of the bourgeois virtues. In the boy prodigy, Rimbaud, it seems to have been partly a reaction from the stuffy, shopworn romanticism of Hugo and Musset and partly pure madness; but in a world of such smug sanities madness might well have seemed the nobler part.

But Claudel's rebellion was against the bourgeois agnosticism, materialism and scientism. He has related somewhere how in a youthful revulsion to the "Moloch-minds" of Taine and Renan he turned back to the Catholic Church. A mystical, or almost mystical Catholicism is the subject of nearly all his works. Here again is a difficulty for the English reader. There is little mystical poetry in English and the best of it, such as Blake's and Emily Bronte's, is not in the Catholic tradition.

All this may help explain why Claudel's poetry is still viewed with some suspicion, if not distaste by some American Catholics, in this country, for a variety of reasons, the irreconcilable antagonisms of the Catholic genius and the bourgeois genius are less manifest than in France. There are some, indeed, who say that American Catholicism has itself become somewhat infected, at least in the esthetic order, with the bourgeois spirit.

The present work, which Claudel called, after the Psalm, Corona benignitatis anni Dei, is a kind of personal prayerbook or breviary in verse, containing frequent quotations or paraphrases from the Roman missal, and arranged, more or less, according to the liturgical calendar, though the scope and scheme are much less elaborate than in Keble's Christian Year. But Claudel's work, even more than Keble's, is an expression of that religious movement which conceives of life itself as liturgy. Yet there is in these poems an intensity and even violence of emotion that would be difficult for any but a poet to sustain.

The violence is somewhat toned down in Sister Mary David's translation, not, of course, by intention, but by processes arising out of the difficult task she has set herself. In attempting to reproduce his measures and couplets—which, ironically suggest a somewhat anticlerical piece by Swinburne called A Song in Time of Revolution—she has been forced to sacrifice much of Claudel's direct and colloquial diction, sometimes to render it into archaisms of devotional English and often to use her own invention to complete the line or make rhyme. Thus "et maintenant ma barbe est grise" becomes "and my beard with gray is attired" . . . and "braver le respect humain" becomes "triumph over human respect and its bands."

The presentation in this edition of the French text and the translation on opposite pages is another illustration of the truth that poetry all but defies translation, so different are the nuances of one language and another. There are lines in Professor Murray's translations that seem more like Shakespeare than Aeschylus or Sophocles, and there are some in the present translation that suggest Father Faber more than Paul Claudel. One readily understands the temptation of the professional poet seeking to translate another to ignore his text and to write an original poem of his own on the same theme. And this recalls the remark of the great classicist Richard Bentley about another and more famous translation. "A very pretty poem, Mr. Pope," said he, "only you mustn't call it Homer."

Patton Incident

By Ernest Lindley

Temper And Stability

GENERAL EISENHOWER'S report, and Secretary Stimson's letter transmitting it to Congress, give a perspective to the Patton incident which was lacking in the outburst of criticism last week. They show that when Eisenhower learned that Patton had upbraided two unwounded patients who had been evacuated and cuffed one of them, he acted promptly. He directed Patton to make amends, and warned him that a repetition of the offense would result in his instant relief. Patton made amends—apparently quite handsomely.

LINDLEY

This left one question unanswered. Had Patton's usefulness as a field commander come to an end? This question could be divided into parts. Did Patton's behavior betray an emotional instability which would prevent him from making sound decisions? Did it impair his standing among the officers and men under his command?

PATTON'S high temper was as well known as the exhibitionist tendencies illustrated by his pearl-handled revolver and his profanity. Patton's mannerisms had amused or irritated a good many civilians and a good many Army officers. But his military record had marked him as an officer of exceptional qualities of leadership. General Marshall and his protege, General Eisenhower, are both quiet, firm, self-effacing men, superficially quite unlike Patton. Neither has shown any tendency to favor leadership of the swash-buckling type. It is a fair presumption that they wanted Patton in spite of his eccentricities, not because of them. Eisenhower gives Patton's driving leadership a large part of the credit for the quick victory in Sicily.

In this connection, it should be noted that Patton's offense was a result of extreme activity. Another general might have sat at headquarters conserving his energy and his poise. Patton, apparently, was all over the place, encouraging this man, bawling out another. In a way, he was trying to act as a sergeant for his whole army. Clearly, as Miss Dorothy Thompson has pointed out, Patton is not tutored in modern psychiatric methods. When he found what he thought were two malingerers he gave them the works. This form of treatment has not been without its successes.

Eisenhower's efforts to establish whether Patton's conduct had impaired his standing among the officers and men under him appear to have been thorough. He concluded that no serious harm had been done, and informs the War Department that "it has been reported many times to me that in every recent public appearance of Patton before any crowd composed of his own soldiers he (Patton) is greeted by thunderous applause."

HARD-BOILEDNESS, a high temper, and efficiency do not always go together. But, as a rule, troops care less about the manners of their leaders than about their effectiveness in battle. The officer who becomes popular among troops in the early stages of training often becomes unpopular on the field of battle, where the hard-driver who knows his stuff comes into his own.

No civilian, and probably no military man in the United States, is in a position to make a sound judgment either on Patton's abilities as a field commander or on the attitude toward him of officers and men in the units still under his command or which might be placed under his command. We must rely on the judgment of the Allied commander in this theater—up to now Eisenhower—or on that of the Allied commander in another theater to which Patton might be assigned.

The only error that can fairly be ascribed to the responsible officials in the handling of the incident was their effort to withhold it from public view. Even here, Eisenhower's purpose was understandable. He did not wish to play into the hands of the enemy or injure a general who had served his country well and whom he apparently still regarded as extremely valuable. His mistake was in thinking that the incident could be bottled up indefinitely. A smart publicity man would have released the story when Patton made his apologies.

Soldiers' Right To Presidency Talk Revived

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Congress' search for a workable way for armed service personnel to vote in next year's election limelights a problem that may prove even more perplexing—can a uniformed man run for public office?

The Army and Navy may have to answer the puzzler more specifically than they have in the past, and it appears certain that if any barriers are put in the way of a presidential candidate because he is in the fighting forces, there will be bipartisan demands in Congress for their removal.

The services now have what amounts to a ban on political office seeking by men on active duty—a ruling that may face a direct challenge if a movement of some Republicans to draft Gen. Douglas MacArthur as a presidential candidate grows. The same question is posed in the prospective candidacy of former Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota.

Stimson's Order Recalled

As an Army man, MacArthur comes within the scope of an order issued by Secretary of War Stimson July 24, 1942, that no individual on active duty thereafter could seek election or reelection to public office or take any active part in political management or campaigns.

Stassen, now in the Navy, is prohibited from running for office by a regulation which states that while on active duty "officers and men will devote their whole time to naval duties and shall not engage in private employment, except in such cases as may be specifically authorized by the Bureau of Naval Personnel."

The Navy interprets this to ban personnel from campaigning or holding office while in the service. Nevertheless, Stassen's name has been entered formally in the Nebraska presidential primary and he has been indorsed as presidential timber by the Minnesota State Republican Committee.

Permission Required

Some legislators point out that if either Stassen or MacArthur should elect to become an active candidate, or if either is drafted as the Republican nominee, they might resign their commissions or ask for transfer to the inactive list. Army or Navy permission for any such move would be required.

Neither, however, might wish to take such action and the question then would arise whether they could continue in active service while others campaigned for them.

The attitude of the services has not been made clear on that point, but there is a bipartisan feeling in Congress that any man who wants to run for President or is seriously advanced even over his own objections ought not to be placed at a disadvantage because he is in uniform.

Would Bar Nobody

Senator McFarland (Democrat), Arizona, who served as chairman of the Senate campaign expenditures committee in the 1942 elections, said he personally thought no man should be barred from seeking the Presidency by any service rule.

Senator Taft (Republican) Ohio, said the presidential race was in a class by itself. He added that he saw no objection to any service man running for any office, but would oppose any candidate's merely permitting his name to go on the ballot when he could not give assurance that he would be able to obtain his release from the armed services and fill the office if elected.

"I don't see how many of the men in uniform could get their release or how they could know that the war would be over in time for them ever to take office," he said.

Senate Group to Sift Facts On Juvenile Delinquency

A special Senate subcommittee on wartime health and education will attempt to establish the facts of juvenile delinquency in relation to the war effort and to recommend remedies, in hearings this week.

Senator Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, chairman of the group, said that although the subject has become one of grave national concern, "there seems to be no compilation of accurate and complete information on the causes, extent, or result of delinquency."

"Our preliminary study of the question," he said, "indicates that prevalent attitudes range from the hysteria of those who treat the problem as one purely of police discipline to those who would put two lollipops in every hand."

"We recognize delinquency as a deep-rooted social problem of many facets," he added. "We hope that the expert witnesses at our hearings will define the broad trouble areas in such a way that we will be able to continue our study with later hearings on specific phases of the overall problem."

The subcommittee was established by Senate resolution last summer to study and investigate deficiencies so as consistently "with the spirit of our institutions and the national emergency best to promote the war and victory for our forces." The committee is concurrently conducting an investigation of the Pascagoula, Miss., shipbuilding area as typical of a war boom town.

While the Pascagoula study will "draw a national pattern of the Nation's state of wartime health," according to Senator Pepper, the hearings on juvenile delinquency are designed to point out one of the specific problems which is causing great concern and which is having "an apparent damaging effect on the war effort," Senator Pepper said.

Other members of the committee are Senators Elbert D. Thomas, Utah; James M. Tunnell, Delaware; Robert M. La Follette, jr., Wisconsin, and Kenneth S. Wherry, Nebraska. Randolph Feltus is staff director of the committee.

Witnesses in the hearings, beginning tomorrow and continuing through Thursday, will include jurists, social workers, penologists, psychologists, and probation experts.

GOP 'Action' Group Tackles Food Setup

Passage of the Fulmer bill to provide for a single food administrator, and an investigation of reports of the wasting and hoarding of food are new objectives of the Republican Drive-for-Action Committee in the House.

Representative Gerald W. Landis of Indiana and Karl E. Mundt of South Dakota, announcing the new program yesterday, said the committee now incluudes 64 members from 26 States.

"Last week saw the successful attainment of two of our original objectives, the House action on the food subsidy question and the petition action on the Disney bill which will now be forced out on the floor on December 13 for a vote," their statement continued. "The Democratic leadership, after permitting two weeks of business-like activity on the House floor during which the Roosevelt Administration suffered some severe setbacks, has again reverted to its cautious habit of announcing 'there is no program for the week' as the order of business in the House. A return to such a 'see-no-evil; speak-no-evil, solve-no-evil' policy is most unfortunate at a time when the country is crying for action on several matters of primary importance.

"Starting Monday noon, therefore, our committee of Republican actionists will utilize every possible parliamentary device to force action on such pressing matters as (1) the appointment of a single food administrator to end the confusion and contradictions existing in the executive departments from the standpoint of the production and distribution of food, (2) the investigation of reports that the unnecessary hoarding and wasting of food is contributing directly to the existing food shortages, (3) the adding of signatures to petition No. 13 to secure action protecting citizens against unfair practices of OPA kangaroo courts and star chamber edicts, (4) the appointment of a staff of experts for the House Appropriations Committee so that an adequate survey can be made of departmental fiscal requirements in order that economy in Government may become a fact rather than a fancy vote-snaring call word."

The statement said that the group's floor leaders, Representative Thomas D. Winter of Kansas and Representative Henry C. Dworshak of Idaho, have arranged a schedule of floor debates "highlighting the need for action on pending legislation and focusing public attention on available legislative remedies which for some reason or other the Democratic majority controlling the House committees continues to delay bringing up for congressional action. New discharge petitions will be introduced if necessary and other parliamentary tactics employed to force an end to the New Deal's policy of never making a decision today which can be deferred until tomorrow."

Phosphate Price Boost Sanctioned

The Office of Price Administration announced yesterday that to compensate mine operators for wage raises recently granted their employes, producer prices for Tennessee phosphate rock had been increased about 20 cents a ton.

The increase will affect sales by operators to manufacturers. It will be absorbed by manufacturers and will not affect prices paid by consumers.

WMC to Discuss Complaints With Newspapermen Tomorrow

A proposed system of regular "communiques" on progress on the manpower and draft fronts—outgrowth of a complaint from the Office of War Information that the War Manpower Commission has been withholding news of public interest—will be considered tomorrow in a conference of WMC representatives and newsmen.

Based on reports from the War Agencies Correspondents' Association and individual reporters, a memorandum containing the complaint was delivered to WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt by OWI Director Elmer Davis last week. It was accompanied by a "bill of particulars," citing specific incidents which OWI said "have led to public confusion, antagonism of reporters and the conviction that WMC is not giving out enough news."

Will See Newsmen

Philip Broughton, WMC director of information, arranged to meet tomorrow with a committee of newspapermen to discuss proposed communiques and other divisions of what Davis called WMC's "rather hostile" attitude toward the press.

The periodic reports, intended to round up and interpret major developments in Selective Service and other Manpower programs, were advocated by OWI.

OWI said the communiques should "avoid guarded comment or inferential, leave-it-to-the-reporter-to-say-what-we-are-afraid-to-say writing."

OWI Recommendations

Other OWI recommendations were: That all WMC activities be considered as "probable news," on the theory that the agency could better risk putting out too much news than not telling the public enough.

That WMC not modify its news relases "to meet minor administrative idiosyncrasies."

OWI did not make Davis' sharp memorandum public, but its contents became known to reporters Saturday.

McNutt, who met reporters late Saturday, did not give flat assurance that any of OWI's recommendations would be carried out. He did, however, authorize Broughton to attempt to work out the situation with representatives of the press.

McNutt said WMC had made "no attempt to conceal" and had "no desire to keep things from you." He stated, however, that his information division was seriously undermanned through lack of funds, and that the burden of work frequently prevented WMC field representatives from supplying statistical data to Washington on labor shortages and other matters.

377,200 Housing Units Completed in Year

The Federal Public Housing Authority reported yesterday that 377,200 accommodations for war-workers were made available for occupancy in the 12-month period ended October 31.

The record of 1000 new units daily, the authority said, has brought the number of war housing units completed with public funds to 563,717, with 111,291 more under construction and 48,556 in the planning stage.

9 Boys Help Weave Tale Of 'Adventure'

Eight boys, the harbor police and William E. Goff of 4974 Benning rd., participated in mild adventure yesterday afternoon when the boys, according to reports, became marooned on a nameless island in the Anacostia River.

The boys, police accounts said, set out in a small boat early in the afternoon, intent upon exploring the not-too-unexplored reaches of the river east of Gallinger Hospital. The island offered temptation. Last news of this river jungle was the discovery there, in 1941, of an "unnamed hermit's body" by the police. Nothing had been heard from the place since.

The youths gave their names and addresses as Wayne Combs, 15, of 1435 B st. ne.; Melvin Lee, 15, 1443 B st. ne.; Walter Wiles, 14, 1700 No. Carolina av. ne.; Booky Payne, 12, 1425 Ames pl. ne.; Teddy Enfantis, 13, 1414 Ames pl. ne.; Donald Miller, 15, 112 15th st. ne.; Ralph Lambert, 15, 1618 A st. ne., and Vernon Sweaden, 16, of 24 14th st. ne.

The boys reached the island safely, explored and started to return when their boat sprang a leak. It sank. Seven of the boys swam back to the island. The eighth swam ashore to the mainland—it isn't very far at that point—and called the police.

The harbor patrol started on its errand of mercy, to rescue the marooned seven.

Goff came along in a steam launch, drew close to the island, picked up the boys and took them ashore.

The boys went home. The police went home. Goff went home.

Thus ended an adventure.

Firestone Begins Regular Television Program Tonight

New York, Nov. 28.—Announcement of a pioneer television program to be known as the "Voice of Firestone Televues" was made today by Harvey S. Firestone, jr., president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. It will be inaugurated tomorrow at 10 p. m., following the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the "Voice of Firestone" radio program and will be broadcast from the National Broadcasting Co. studios.

The program will be introduced by Firestone and Niles Trammell, president of NBC, who will appear on the television screen.

SEC Weighing Associated Gas Reorganization

Philadelphia, Nov. 28 (AP).—The Securities and Exchange Commission disclosed today that its public utilities division has submitted proposed findings which recommend that the commission adopt a plan of reorganization filed under the Holding Company Act by trustees for Associated Gas and Electric Co. and Associated Gas and Electric Corp.

Capitalization of the reorganized company would consist of $7,500,000 new senior debt and 7,500,000 shares of $5 par value common stock.

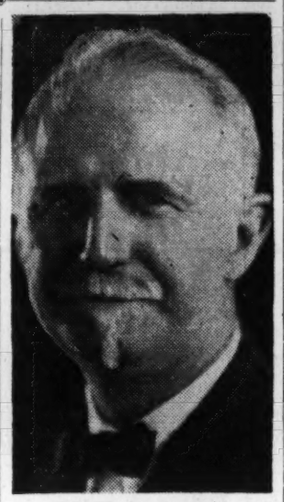
Hints To Taxpayers

By George W. Babson

New Situations Need Analysis

First, let me say a word to young businessmen who claim that they have not the opportunity of making a fortune which their elders had. They claim that at their age the money which their elders were permitted to save for a business nest egg is now taken away by the Government in the form of taxes. Let me say this is merely an alibi for laziness, inefficiency and extravagant ideas.



ROGER W. BABSON

"Let us assume a man with a salary of $3000 who has a wife and two children. His Federal tax would be about $350. It is true that he has this much less money to save or invest toward buying an interest in some business. On the other hand, although the net income, after taxes of the young executive is reduced by a tax of about 12 per cent, his employer would probably be obliged to pay a tax of 50 per cent to 75 per cent of his net income. This reduces the value of the business to the employer and causes him to sell it much cheaper than if these heavy taxes did not exist.

"Before these Federal taxes went into effect a man could die and leave his business outright to his family, as the death taxes were very small. Today, however, in a great many cases the family is compelled to sell a part interest in the business in order to secure funds to pay the death taxes. This gives the exceptional opportunity to young executives employed in the business to secure an interest at a very low price.

"The present Federal ceiling on interest rates enables young people today to buy a home or business and pay for it with an interest rate of perhaps only half what they would be obliged to pay before these taxes went into effect. I, myself, am a director of a bank which has voted to loan a young man money at 3 per cent in order to buy an interest in a department store. This same money would have cost him 6 per cent 15 years ago.

Business success is not a matter of legislation; but rather of heredity, industry, integrity and vision. Whatever our system of government, a certain group, who save, work and intelligently plan, will always be on top. All young people have a greater opportunity to succeed in the true sense today than ever before. Even children of the well-to-do may be better off under high Federal taxes. There is such a thing as leaving children too much money.

Now, just a word to those employers and investors who have large tax bills: Previous Decembers I have called attention to the importance of taking losses in order to offset certain gains. In many cases this should be done today. On the other hand, a new factor enters the situation this year which has never happened before. This year an amendment to the Federal Tax Law threw out 75 per cent of one full tax year so as to get on a "pay-as-you-go" basis.

After much struggle, it was agreed to throw out 75 per cent of either 1942 or 1943, "whichever is the smaller." This means that one must estimate his 1943 income and compare the same with his 1942 and pay the 25 per cent excess tax on whichever is the larger. Now, I find my friends are instinctively doing the wrong thing by trying to show their 1943 income as small as possible when in many cases much money could be saved in taxes by showing it as large as possible. Let me illustrate:

When a taxpayer last December sold securities at a profit, he was obliged to pay 25 per cent in taxes on said profit. This December, however, if his 1943 income is larger than his 1942 income, he is obliged to pay a tax of only 25 per cent of said 25 per cent as the Government "forgives" 75 per cent of either 1942 or 1943, whichever is the smaller. This means that this is a year when taxes can sometimes be saved by taking profits as well as by taking losses if taxpayers will go at it intelligently. Hence, consult your lawyer, banker or accountant.

Even industry gets one break in the present tax law, namely, the privilege of replacing old machinery with new machinery, old merchandise with new merchandise and all kinds of scrap with profitable items and having the Government pay most of the cost. By selling these outmoded things at the present time, a business concern may save from 40-90 per cent over what may be possible after the war is over. Do so this December as after World War II you may not either have the money to buy the new equipment or the abovementioned tax advantage.

Now, just a word for heirs and charities. The present law allows every taxpayer to give $3000 this year to any person without paying a gift tax which in many cases would ordinarily run from 20-50 per cent. It further allows the giving of 15 per cent of one's income to charities which gift is tax-exempt. For instance, a person in a 50 per cent bracket can give away $1000 with it costing him only $500.

Furthermore, if a taxpayer gives away securities instead of cash he can (1) avoid the tax which he would pay on the profit; (2) be allowed contribution deduction for the market value of the securities; and (3) then invest the money he would ordinarily contribute in this same security, thus establishing a higher cost-price for future sale. When one considers the tax deduction for contributions, plus the saving through not selling, and tops these savings off by replacing, after 30 days, the same securities, he may find that it is indeed possible to save through generous giving to your relatives, your church or some useful charity.

Why Thousands of Doctors Prescribed This For CHILDREN'S BAD COUGHS
(CAUSED BY COLDS)

Mothers are simply overjoyed about Pertussin because often the first spoonfuls help bring PROMPT relief from bronchial and croupy coughs due to colds. And Pertussin is so pleasant and safe for kiddies to take! Nothing to sicken delicate little stomachs—it's entirely free from dope, chloroform and creosote.

Pertussin is scientifically prepared to act at once to relieve your child's coughing spell. It increases natural secretions in the respiratory tract to soothe dry irritated membranes. It improves ciliary action, loosens sticky phlegm and makes it easier to raise. Also mighty effective for adults. Inexpensive! Any drugstore.

WLB Arrives At 'Policy' on Yule Bonuses

Determination of whether a Christmas bonus paid with regularity in the past should be paid again differs in individual cases and must be decided "according to the particular circumstances of each case," the War Labor Board said yesterday.

One of the main factors in each case must be: "May the bonus properly be considered to be an integral part of the wage or salary structure?" The board said, adding that an employer would not necessarily be bound to pay a Christmas bonus even though one was customary, if proper showing can be made why it should not be paid.

The board applied the "policy," as written in an opinion by Chairman William H. Davis, in a case involving the Nineteen Hundred Corporation of St. Joseph, Mich., and the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (CIO).

The board denied the union members a Christmas bonus for the year 1942, thereby reversing a decision of the regional War Labor Board at Detroit, which had granted the Christmas bonus.

The board, in an announcement November 16, ruled that regular Christmas bonuses may be paid voluntarily by employers without board approval if they do not exceed bonuses given last year.

In the present opinion, however, Davis said a Christmas bonus may be so roooted in custom that it may constitute part of the wage or salary structure and nonpayment may result in a decrease in wage rates requiring approval of the board.

Advertising Called A Prime Agency In War Effort

The Commerce Department indorsed advertising yesterday as a prime agency "in persuading people to do their part in the war effort," but suggested a reduction in the use of space "in order to meet the threat of the serious paper shortage."

At the same time the Department reiterated its advice to continue advertising in order to maintain good will and protect trademarks.

Domestice Commerce, monthly publication of the Department, said both advertisers and publishers are faced with a serious threat—the paper shortage, and said that "smaller-sized advertisements will relieve the paper strain on already overcrowded publications, many of which are now turning away new advertisers."

Navy Flier Cited For Sinking Subs

The Navy announced yesterday award of the Legion of Merit to Lieut. Comdr. Carl Eugene Jones for services as commanding officer of Composite Squadron One, which attacked and sank a number of Nazi submarines.

The squadron commanded by 29-year-old Jones, Century, Fla., was stationed aboard the aircraft carrier Card, which with its planes and escort ships recently received a presidential unit citation for sinking more Nazi submarines than any team in naval history.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

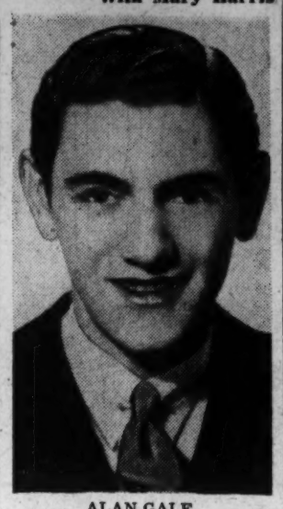
Carmen Cavallaro will close at the Statler on Thursday night, December 2. There will be many parties in his honor in the next couple of days.

IT'S GEORGE AND TERRY at the Anchor Room beginning today, instead of Georgia and Jerry who closed on Saturday after many months. Making the transition even more smooth is the fact that George and Terry (the last name is Sterling), like Georgia and Jerry, are also a boy and girl team, do doble vocals and piano tricks.

All hearties with pirate blood in their veins should do all right at Treasure Island's "Treasure Hunt" this afternoon. Digging starts at 4, continues until 6. Those unearthing doubloons will get a feed on the house, the unsuccessful will be consoled with favors.

ANITA BOYER, who's canaried with Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey and Dick Todd, opens at El Patio tonight. She comes direct from New York's Cafe Society (don't ask us whether it's the uptown or downtown version) is married to Bob Dukoff, tenor saxist with Justin Stone's band in the Victory Room, and is said to be a young blitz.

THE CELEBRITIES CALL! Gladys Swarthout, with a hungry husband on her arm, came into the Windsor Room the other eve, ordered two of the biggest steaks in the House . . . Ray Hare, Redskin star, snickered out loud at Olmsted's Club when Hal Yates sang his newest, "Lord Stuffit." Sitting quietly in the background we saw Herb Sachs, owner of the exclusive Del Rio, on his first visit to Olmsted's . . . The Army fairly took over the Dubonnet Room the other night at the huge farewell party for Col. Edson Berlin . . . Vice President Osmena of the Philippines spent an evening at the Madrillon recently. There, too, we saw W. M. Kiplinger, author and Government affairs expert, waltzing sedately . . . "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh of the Redskins ringsided at Kavakos Grill with his friend, Bill Kavakos . . . Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., has been flying around the Carlton and Statler.



ALAN GALE, tiptop funster, who heads Paul Young's new show, opening tomorrow eve

"STARDUST NIGHTS" WILL START AT JOE MOSS' RESTAURANT 400 ON DECEMBER 6, CONTINUE EVERY MONDAY THEREAFTER. AMATEUR SINGERS, MUSICIANS AND COMEDIANS ARE INVITED TO ENTER. WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A CONTRACT AT "400" OR A NEW YORK BISTRO IN WHICH JOE HAS AN INTEREST.

OF EATING AND DRINK. Hi Hat's major domo, Joe, has the most poignant memories of Cuba. He recalls the days when fifths of rum sold for 25 and 30 cents in Havana. "The high-class rum was 30 cents a bottle," says Joe regretfully. . . . Chinese steak with Ho Yu (oyster sauce and greens) at Ruby Foo's is a new thrill for steak lovers. . . . A brother team is making food and service hum at the Hamilton Hotel. Michael Pugliese is the maitre d'hotel and his brother, Ralph, is the new chef. . . . Artichokes, cooked to perfection; fine Italian-type cheese and an appetizer of finocchio and chunks of honey-sweet cantaloupe were highlights of a recent gourmets' dinner at the Copocaba. . . . Sizzly halves of chicken cooked in the best Virginia style are the reason for the crowded condition of the Lafayette Chicken Hut. . . . The jumbo squabs in the Pall Mall Room are epicures' items. . . . Ditto for the pompano a la papeterie as served in the Old New Orleans. . . . "C'est la guerre" says the polite notice on the Roger Smith dining room door explaining that no one can be seated after 8:30.

Lee and Leslie Miller of the Neptune Room have had to stop playing "Pistol Packin' Mamma." It seems the customers started to sing the chune—and introduced some verses that would make a printing press stutter.

FEMME ANGLES. Lots of girls would love to snatch the green and gold brocade coat worn by baritone Slepoushkin at the Troika. It'd make the handsomest evening wrap in town. . . . If American soldiers in North Africa are meeting any temptations like the Moroccan dancer impersonated by Astra Andre at the Lotus—something ought to be done about it. . . . Margaret Lopatin, owner of Burt's Trans-Lux, is wearing a flashing topaz butterfly. . . . Jane Marlow of Restaurant "823" wears aviator's wings—a gift from her husband. . . . Carole Page of the Mayflower Lounge is verra chic of afternoons in a little black tailleur with red rosebuds in her hair. . . . The boy friend of Elaine Moore of the King Cole Room is a paratrooper. . . . Betty McHugh, singing with Bill Grassick's band in the Metronome Room, is a Newark girl, sang in the glee club at West Side High School.

Armed Services Get 44 More Men From Washington

Forty-four Washington men, including two Negroes, will report for duty with the armed forces tomorrow, District Selective Service headquarters announced yesterday. SATURDAY'S ANSWER

THE 'DAY OFF' THAT COST HIM HIS JOB!

It wasn't so much that single day off, but the weeks of half-hearted, listless work that his absence stood for . . . Poor Bill! He didn't know what had gotten into him. He wasn't really sick, but he was "just not himself." Tired all the time, pale and underweight—no pep at all!

Finally, he found out what the trouble was! . . . "Nutritional anemia," his doctor told him, "not enough iron in your blood! A few bottles of Gude's Pepto-Mangan ought to fix you up!"

Pepto-Mangan helps make the blood redder and richer in iron. Many doctors prescribe Pepto-Mangan for pale, weak, rundown men, women and children who need more iron to build them up and to help them get back their strength, endurance and healthy color.

Has proved its benefits for more than 50 years. Pleasant to take. Sold by all druggists with a money-back guarantee of satisfaction. Ask for the original and only Gude's Pepto-Mangan!

Bishop-elect Dun Confers With Diocesan Leaders

The Very Rev. Angus Dun, dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Cambridge, Mass., and Episcopal Bishop-elect of Washington, conferred yesterday afternoon with diocesan leaders and was the dinner guest last night of Canon Charles W. F. Smith of the Washington Cathedral at 3508 Woodley rd. nw. He attended the 11 a. m. service at Washington Cathedral.

This morning Dr. Dun plans to visit the Episcopal Diocesan House, 1702 Rhode Island ave. nw. He will be the luncheon guest of Miss Mabel B. Turner, headmistress of the National Cathedral School for Girls. He plans to return with Mrs. Dun this afternoon to Cambridge and will announce his decision on whether he will accept the Washington bishopric after two weeks' consideration.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

DON'T TAKE those "Bricker-for-President" breezes from Capitol Hill too seriously. Senate and House members from Ohio have come out unanimously for the Ohio Governor—but inside fact is that they would prefer to see Senator Bob Taft emerge as the GOP White House nominee.

Further inside fact is that Taft hasn't completely eliminated himself as a presidential hopeful, though it was Taft—and none other—who convinced Bricker that he should throw his hat in the presidential ring even after Bricker had made up his mind to run for a fourth term as Governor of Ohio.

This eased out, in part, at a secret meeting of Ohio Senators and Congressmen which indorsed Bricker unanimously for the presidency. While everybody was giving lip service to Bricker, it was quite apparent that their hearts belonged to Taft.

Hardly had the "unanimous" meeting for Bricker begun when Representative Ed Rowe of Ohio declared that he doubted that Bricker could beat Wendell Willkie in the Akron area. Willkie had got in a lot of spadework in this section, Rowe said, and had some potent backing, including that of Robert Weaver, a Cleveland manufacturer.

Representative Frances Bolton of Ohio, one of the wealthiest members of Congress, demurred that Miss Marion Martin, chief of the women's division of the Republican National Committee, had "turned against" Willkie and that Willkie could therefore expect little support from GOP women voters in 1944.

This was quickly challenged on the ground that Miss Martin was a political ally of Sinclair Weeks of Massachusetts, treasurer of the Republican National Committee and a strong Willkie booster. However, Mrs. Bolton insisted that Miss Martin had been "talking against" Willkie.

It was brought out that Representative Carroll Reece of Tennessee, a Republican, likely would manage Bricker's campaign and could assure the Ohio Governor the support of most of the Southern delegates at the GOP convention.

This raised Bricker's stock a little, but most of the Ohio Congressmen still are secretly for Taft, though they cast a unanimous vote for Bricker at the caucus.

American Prisoners

AMERICAN PRISONERS in Germany seem to be receiving good treatment, if letters which kindly former Senator Clyde Herring of Iowa gets from his son are any criterion.

Senator Herring, whose boy was captured in Tunisia (and who had a second son die just as he was entering the Army), reports that American prisoners are reasonably well-fed, receive their mail regularly. Young Herring has received all the packages sent by his father, and recently the camp got 15 harmonicas sent by the YMCA. He reported that the resultant noise was likely to drive the German guards away from camp.

American and British prisoners, formerly together, have now been segregated, for reasons best known to the Nazis. Prison camps were moved north some time ago, apparently because the Germans feared a United States-British second front from the south. But now with the camps in the north, the Germans face a much more imminent Russian invasion from that direction.

Synthetic Tires

EARLY NEXT YEAR the American public will get its first real test of synthetic tires. These will not be passenger, but bus and truck tires, which will begin to come out of tire factories some time in January.

They will be hurried to the wheels of buses and trucks, now limping along on sharply reduced rations. Even in September, the allocation of 550,000 civilian bus and truck tires was inadequate. But now the figure has been reduced still further to 335,000 for November and December.

Operators of trucks and buses are worried about the new tires, knowing that early tests have shown they do not stand up under heavy loads. This in spite of the fact that they are only 70 per cent synthetic, with an admixture of 30 per cent natural rubber.

Result will be that truck and bus loads will have to be reduced all over the country. Since they are already operating above normal capacity, reduction of loads will mean reduction in the total performance of trucks and buses.

Of course, the synthetics may prove to be better than tests have shown, but the trucking industry has its fingers crossed.

Let There Be Light

LOQUACIOUS REPRESENTATIVE "Silent John" Rankin of Mississippi is anti-New Deal on practically all issues but the public-power question. Rankin always comes out swinging when a colleague attempts to besmirch the TVA or the Rural Electrification Administration. Recently he declared on the floor:

"The greatest thing that has been done for the American farmer is rural electrification."

Puckish, freshman Representative Calvin Johnson of Illinois, one of the more adept hecklers on the Republican side, spoke up: "Isn't it a fact that the REA has been one of the finest accomplishments simply because farmers have to work day and night to make a living, and therefore REA gave them electric light to do their night work by?"

"Well, they are better off than in Republican days under the Fordney-McCumber Act," shot shot back Rankin. "Then they were forced to work both night and day without light."

'Divide and Conquer' Has Local Premiere Tonight; Gossip of the Theater

"DIVIDE AND CONQUER" will be given its first public presentation in Washington tonight at 8.30 o'clock in the Sapphire Room of the Mayflower Hotel, under the auspices of France Forever . . . Third of the War Department's "Why We Fight" series; edited by Frank Capra from films made in action, largely by the Nazis from whom they were captured . . . Naturally, the film analyzes and explains the Battle of France . . . Second of the "soirees de cinema" sponsored by the France Forever group, the program will be augmented by three first-run, French short subjects—'The Crab," by Jean Painleve, scientist, and two surrealist cartoons in which the voice of Yvette Guilbert, famous diseuse, will be heard . . . Daphne Hellman, harpiste, will play a group of French melodies . . . Tickets on sale at the door . . . In case you think we overplayed Dunninger, the celebrated mentalist, in Saturday's column, you should see the three-and-one-half column story about his unbelievable telepathic wizardry in the current issue of Variety! . . . The fellow is uncanny . . . Following the current "Old Acquaintance," at the Earle, the screen feature will be Republic's "In Old Oklahoma," the title against which the Theater Guild had thoughts of securing an injunction, or something, for infringement on its ne plus ultra musical, recently at the National . . . If this week's trailer is for true, the John Wayne-Martha Scott costarrer is the ripsnortingest blood-and-thunder opus that has come to a local big-time screen in goodness knows when—if ever . . . There is enough violence in it to win the war.

Free, Gratis, for Nothing

Since its opening last May 18, the Free Tickets to Servicemen Hut, perched out at the edge of Post Square, facing this family journal, has distributed a total of 231,619 tickets, without cost to servicemen, for more than 40 centers of amusement . . . Figures are the tabulation of the War Activities Committee of the amusement industry in the District and the War Hospitalities Committee of the Community War Fund, cosponsors of the free-ticket plan . . . The tickets for gratuitous disbursement are contributed by the motion picture theaters, legitimate and amateur theaters; concert, recital and opera managements, baseball, wrestling, boxing, football and other sports interests; radio quiz shows, Glen Echo Park, the circus and State society dances . . . During its 26 weeks, the Hut has been charmingly and efficiently "manned" by the ladies of the Washington Variety Club . . . Five magnificent mutts, rated the most expensive mongrels in the world, are working in the Warner Brothers' "Uncertain Glory," a picture about the French underground movement . . . Pooches are valued by their owner, Rennie Renfro, at $2500, because of their camera knowledge . . . Deviating slightly from the late Richard Harding Davis' "Bar Sinister," they wouldn't bring a nod in a dog show, owing to their questionable and highly complicated lineage . . . Speaking of such, Prof. "Dod" Dodson, trainer of the Simian Braintrust, now on the stage at the Capitol, is a former Fort Worth, Tex., high school teacher . . . Decided years ago that handling monkeys was no harder than trying to teach kids English composition . . . The act is fresh out of "Star and Garter," the Broadway musical . . . Also is the same one that was entertaining the service boys at Schofield Barracks on that infamous December 7, 1941 . . . Although their tent was riddled by Japanese machine-gun fire, none of the monks was seriously injured.

From Obscurity to the Lights

As a result of an intensive six-month search for talent, the Warner Burbank studios have placed a lot of promising youngsters on their contract list . . . Recruited from a broad field, ranging from institutions of higher learning to burlesque . . . Joyce Reynolds, already seen in "George Washington Slept Here" and "The Constant Nymph," has been named for the leading role in "Janie" . . . Following her from the UCLA drama department, are Jean Sullivan, in the top feminine role with Errol Flynn in "Uncertain Glory," and Marjorie Henshaw . . . Snatched from burlesque is Robert Alda, making his screen debut in the George Gershwin role in "Rhapsody in Blue" . . . Camera unknowns with Cary Grant and John Garfield in "Destination Tokyo" include Tom Tully, William Prince, John Alvin, Warner Anderson, Robert Hutton and John Forsythe, from stages spreading from Broadway through stock to the Detroit Little Theater . . . Zachary Scott, another newcomer, had the male lead in the New York production of "Those Endearing Young Charms" and Robert Shayne has appeared on Broadway with Katharine Cornell, Ethel Barrymore and others of the top flight—expected to be another Edward G. Robinson, James Cagney or Humphrey Bogart . . . Contracts of Cheryl Walker and Marjorie Riordan, both prominent in "Stage Door Canteen," have been taken over from Sol Lesser . . . Actors are where you find them, the Warners always say.

Later-Than-You-Think Note

A salute to Mrs. Annie J. Sucrow, Silver Spring, Md., for the first Christmas card of the season.

LEONARD LYONS

Times Square Tattle

New York, Nov. 28.—Young Bill Nichols, editor of "This Week" magazine, will have a lucky break, in timing, in the issue now on the stands. The issue features a short story by Beatrice A. Patton, wife of General Patton. It's called "Lucky Shot," and is her first fiction piece . . . "Lucky Shot" is based on a true story of the last war, told to the author by her soldier-husband. And it deals, of all things, with the psychology of cowardice.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

In the early part of last year, when Churchill and the President met, the accompanying joint staffs agreed on tentative plans for action in the Pacific. At the second meeting, when the plans were mentioned, the British had no recollection of them. When the new plans were drawn up, the Americans therefore asked the British to initial each page . . . At the third meeting, in Quebec, the British couldn't recall having initialed any plans for the campaigns in the Pacific. "You won't forget, next time," said one high American official, "because here are the new plans—calling for Mountbatten to be boss there."

F. Hugh Herbert, author of "Kiss and Tell," is writing a play for Patricia Kirk—daughter of Nancy Carroll and Jack Kirkland, who is appearing in the Chicago company of the current hit . . . The Pepper Committee will hold surprise hearings on juvenile delinquency and the war . . . Senator Pepper, incidentally, made a speech with Secretary Ickes, at an American-Soviet rally, and, in comparing their speeches, confessed: "Ickes got in the best licks" . . . Although Sam Goldwyn offered to make the movie version of "Winged Victory" and give all the profits to Army Emergency Relief, the play is expected to go to Twentieth Century-Fox.

A young Hungarian writer in Holywood has been visiting the Hungarian colony, meeting again the aging men who first became famous in the days when Vienna was gay and Budapest a city of charm. "They all are devout campaigners for bringing Otto of Hapsburg to the throne," he reported . . . "But why do those oldtimers hope for the Hapsburg restoration?" he was asked . . . "Because their youth is associated with a Hapsburg court. When a Hapsburg last reigned, they danced and loved," he explained. "And they fancy that if a Hapsburg is restored, so too will be their ability to dance and love again."

Jan Peerce, the opera star, sang at the Met the other night with Lily Pons. And as Peerce sang someone in the audience, remembering Jan's rise from a summer resort singer to Radio City and finally to the Met, nudged the man next to him and proudly said: "Y'know? Jan Peerce is my cousin" . . . The other man countered: "Y'know? Sid Gary, the vaudeville singer, he's my brother" . . . The first one lifted his eyebrows and challenged: "So what's the comparison?"

Hit 'Sleeper' On Pix Screen

"Fired Wife," the romantic comedy currently at the Pix, is what is known to the trade as a "sleeper." Though it's had little benefit of ballyhoo, and though Louise Albritton and Robert Paige, the stars, are not top "names," still it is as neat and funny an escapist offering as the tired Government girl could wish for.

It's the often-successful formula of the interrupted honeymoon which affords the plot's hilarious situations. Miss Albritton, as the assistant to a Broadway producer who thinks a love marriage would take her mind off her work and end her usefulness to him, swears the man she marries to secrecy, so that she can continue her career.

Meanwhile, the producer, faced with the imminent deportation of his leading man, an alien, gets the inspiration of preventing the deportation by marrying the actor to Miss Albritton. A gossip columnist's expose, a stay in jail and a Reno divorce intervene before the luckless lovers finally get together.

Paige and Miss Albritton are deftly comic in the leading roles and Diana Barrymore and Walter Abel surpass previous performances.

"That Nazty Nuisance," the lower half of the bill, is an unsuccessful attempt to make Hitler & Co. funny.

HEDDA HOPPER

Air Expert on Ground

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 28.—Phil Stern, air forces photographer, will do technical work on "Ground Forces." It's Warner's followup on "Air Force."... We've had "Hitler's Children," "Where Are YourChildren?" "Are These Your Children?" and more about child delinquency. So Harry Cohn bought Bertha Strosberg's original story. "America's Children," and will tell what's right with our kids. We don't have to look far to find most of our children are doing tremendous jobs, so why keep shouting about those who aren't? You'll always find one or two rotten apples in every barrel. And speaking of child delinquency, how about a picture showing the real culprits—the delinquent parents?

MOSS HART

Old Wine in New Bottles

After reading story and reviews on Moss Hart's "Winged Victory," for which asking price for movies is a million dollars, it strikes me it's practically the same story Arthur Hornblow put on the screen some years back called "I Wanted Wings," which introduced Veronica Lake. . . . Charlie McCarthy's protege, Jane Powell, who's 14, wear's a platinum wig in "Song of the Open Road." Gosh! Isn't that starting a little early? . . . Pete Smith's son, a naval flyer, is home for a few days' leave. . . . Walter Pidgeon back from Seattle. He was recruiting SPARS. . . . Little Margaret O'Brien had a little chat with Santa Claus in a downtown store. Finally sat in his lap, then looking at him closely said, "You know, that isn't a very good make-up job you've got on. Why don't you come out to Metro and let Jack Dawn go to work on you? He's an expert on whiskers!"

Here and There

Hugh Fenwick, back from India, tells me Comdr. Gene Markey's native house man now answers to the name of Jeevee. When he was stopping at Shepheard's Hotel in Cairo, everyone, including the King of Greece, was buzz-buzzing about Jack Benny being there. They were frightfully excited. Hugh said, "Well, where is he?" Nobody knew. But in walking down the long porch, he found Jack sitting quietly, sound asleep.

Diverse Fare At Trans-Lux

In the news section of the new bill at the Trans-Lux Theater, the first pictures of the Red army on the march and the recapture of Kharkov, and the Yanks in action at Bougainville are among the arresting "clips." Of like interest are the views of Allied wounded returning home and Secretary Hull's report to Congress on the Moscow Cnoference. Another important inclusion is the discussion of the "Problems of World Peace," by Governor Dewey, Vice President Wallace and Wendell Willkie.

A wide range of other topics, including domestic events and sports, occupies appropriate footage.

Foremost among the short subjects is the "Children of Mars" release in the "This Is America" series, having to do with juvenile delinquency and its remedy. "Racing Royalty," dedicated to sports, and "To Each Other," a pictorial story of U. S. steel, add variety to the program.

Disney's cartoon comedy, "Figaro and Cleo," is in there to tickle the risibilities of those concerned with kittens and goldfish.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

It's a wise football coach who counts no season a perfect one until after the Army-Navy game. The most incredible things can happen that day, viz, what happened to Notre Dame last Saturday and what befell Boston College one year before, on the afternoon of another Army-Navy battle.

POVICH

The greatest upsets of college football of the past two seasons have occurred on the days when Army-Navy were supposed to command the headlines. Last Saturday, Notre Dame was poised for a victory that would pin down its greatest year in history. Unbeaten and untied, Frank Leahy's Irish needed only to lick the Great Lakes Sailors in its final game. With 30 seconds to play they had a 14-12 lead. This was it—but not quite. Notre Dame didn't win the ball game. Great Lakes did, 19 to 14.

A year ago on the afternoon that Navy was playing Army at Annapolis, Boston College was meeting Holy Cross in what was supposed to be a soft-touch victory for the Eagles. Nobody had been able to lick Denny Myers' Boston team. They were unstoppable. Some folks were even comparing Boston College with the Chicago Bears. But midway in the afternoon, the most amazing reports began to trickle in from Boston. Holy Cross was scoring against the Eagles. A couple of times, and then some more. The final score—Boston College, 12; Holy Cross, 55.

Up at West Point over the weekend, Army didn't win many friends for the T-Formation which is pretty to watch when smoothly executed but rather messy otherwise. There were times when even Army junked it for the direct pass from center. Actually, Navy with the supposedly conservative single-wing was hiding the ball better than Army with its fake reverses and half-spinners involving Willis Hume and Babe Hamberg.

Army was bungling the game so badly that it's plight at one point in the third quarter bordered on the pathetic. The Cadets gained the ball on a punt on their own 43 and in good position. But three plays later, after a holding penalty, a forward pass that Rafalko dropped and interference with a Navy back who threatened to intercept another of Kenna's passes, Army was back on its own 11 yard line with 42 yards to go for a first down.

Army's lack of deception can be traced probably to the fact that Tom Lombardo, unlike other T quartebacks, isn't the team's forward passer and poses no passing threat after taking the ball from center. A lot of waste motion with very little trickery takes place in the Army backfield thereafter. Lombardo, unable to palm the ball like such fancy T quarterbacks as Luckman and Bertelli gets rid of it usually with a short lateral for all to see.

Navy drove 43 yards for its first touchdown but actually the drive originated from the fumbling habits of Glenn Davis who didn't lose the ball but put Army in trouble. Navy was punting from it own 33 yard line and Hamberg got off a kick that wasn't one of his best. It was settling in the arms of Davis on the Army 30, the scenery was rigged for a good runback by the fleet Davis what with the Navy ends not yet down field, but at this spot he fumbled and when he recovered the ball he was smeared on the Army 25.

Little Babe Hamberg, in contrast, was magnificent. What has been advertised as an individual battle between Hamberg and Davis in the backfields didn't develop. The 150-pound Navy back gathered new glory on Saturday, not with his passing that was supposed to be his chief weapon, but with his kicking and running. He used the threat of his pass to panic the Army defense and scamper through the line after faking the West Point forwards out of position. Hamberg's running set up Navy's first touchdown.

There is some doubt, though, as to whether Hamberg or Hume was the No. 1 performer for Navy Saturday. Overshadowed all year by Hamberg, Hume had himself a day against Army whose scouts had not reckoned him as an explosive runner.

Navy gambled and won on the play that set up its first touchdown. From the Army 31, Hamberg tried another of his fake passes and slicked outside right tackle only to be stopped by Maxon who came up from secondary. With Maxon hanging on his neck, Hamberg got rid of the ball on a lateral. It wasn't very clever, just desperate, a high, wobbly toss that Hume somehow grabbed and scampered off with for 25 more yards to the Army 6.

Army's line was under terrific pressure all afternoon. The big Navy men up front, Whitmire and Sprinkle and Chase and Brown, wore down the West Point line. Whelchel substituted freely without any seeming loss of drive and the Navy tackling was rocking the speed boys in the Army backfield. When little Bill Barron took up his job in the Navy secondary defense, that improved too.

And Army saw enough of Bob Jenkins in that first quarter to cause them some concern for the next three years. On his bull-charges outside the tackles, Jenkins was gaining five yards or more after being hit hard. What should concern Army is that the big boy is only a Plebe.

Great Lakes 'Pulled in Line' To Stop Irish Running Game

Great Lakes, Ill., Nov. 28 (AP).—It was a maneuver aikn to tightening the belt before facing adversity when Lieut. Paul (Tony) Hinkle told his Great Lakes football team to pull its linemen close together to check Notre Dame's rushing attack—taking a chance, of course, on end runs. It worked—and that's how the Sailors kept the Irish from an unbeaten season.

That was the calm but inwardly jubilant Hinkle's explanation of why mighty Notre Dame was successful on only two of its fabulous downfield marches yesterday, a pair which the Blue Jackets duplicated in the third period and then outclassed with the superb Lach-to-Anderson touchdown heave in the last 35 seconds.

"Most of the time we used a seven-man line," Hinkle said today, "Forgetting the usual spacing and tightening up all along. Certainly we were vulnerable to end runs and they were successful on a few, but we checked them down the middle just enough."

Sitko, Proctor Gallop

Meanwhile Great Lakes sprang Emil Sitko and Dewey Proctor through that seemingly impenetrable Notre Dame line to outrush the Irish and top them in first downs. Sitko gained more than 100 yards, including scoots of 33 and 24 yards, while Proctor ran wild for better than 150, including his 52-yard drive for the second Sailor touchdown that gave the Navy a 12-to-7 margin and paved the way for that remarkable Irish touchdown parade in the final period.

And that last Notre Dame score, putting the Irish ahead 14 to 12 with 65 seconds left, would have gone down in football history as one of the most sensational comebacks of all time. But the memory of that romp was erased by the Frank Merriwell finish the Sailors pulled 30 seconds later.

Bonne Sille, Claws Split Show Honors

Pvt. Bobby Lee's Bonne Sille, 4-year-old chestnut daughter of the popular stallion Bon Nuit, yesterday split honors with U. S. Randle's Claws at the Green Meadows Horse Show near Hyattsville, Md.

Bonne Sille captured the jumper championship to nose out Randle's veteran campaigner, and then placed second to Claws in the hunter title. Private Lee's mare was ridden in jumper classes by Gardner Hallman and in the hunter outing by Dorothy Lee. For the Randle mount, the show marked a surprising return to form for the 12-year-old gelding.

Charles Town Meeting Today Ends Season

Charles Town, W. Va., No. 28.—The East's racing season, curtailed in some spots, but a record one both in crowds and wagering wherever the sport has been conducted, enters its final 1943 phase tomorrow with the opening of an 18-day meeting of the Charles Town Jockey Club. This will be the 11th late fall session since the sporty turf plant was built on the scene of racing as far back as 1786.

Post time for the first race will be 1 p. m. and every effort will be made to conclude each day's program by 4:30 p. m. Eight races are scheduled with the daily double being conducted on the first and second events.

As usual Charles Town's stables are jammed with an overflow of some 200 thoroughbreds bedded down in privately owned stalls hereabouts. Prominent Washington as well as Maryland and Virginia racing strings are represented.

Stewards for the meeting are Thomas C. Bradley, William B. Watkins and Fred Burton. Betting will be in the capable Mutuel Manager Donald Hay. John Morrissey will do the starting as usual.

Charles Town, the first track in the country to have an all-out Victory Meeting, holds a record of having raised $93,000 for Army and Navy Relief at a single session.

Randolph Field To Meet Texas U. In Cotton Bowl

Dallas, Nov. 28 (AP).—Randolph Field was selected today to oppose Texas in the Cotton Bowl here January 1.

Dan D. Rogers, chairman of the board of directors of the Cotton Bowl Athletic Association, made the announcement tonight following a poll of the Cotton Bowl Committee and a conference with Coach D. X. Bible of the University of Texas, the host team Southern Conference champion.

Bears Clinch West Title, Rally to Beat Cards, 35 to 24

Luckman Sets Scoring Pass Mark With 4

Chicago, No. 28 (AP).—The Chicago Bears won the Western division championship of the National Football League for the fourth straight year today by defeating the Chicago Cardinals, 35 to 24, but they had to come from behind three times—on each occasion on a touchdown pass by Sid Luckman—to do it.

Luckman threw a fourth scoring aerial in the waning minutes of the game to set a new record for touchdown passes in one season of 28, beating the old mark of 24 by Green Bay's Cecil Isbell made in 1942. Sid also set a new one-season record of 2194 yards on aerials by completing 10 out of 21 for 242 yards today. That topped the old mark of 2021, also held by Isbell and made last year.

In addition, Bob Snyder booted five points after touchdown to boost his new record in that department to 40 successful tries in one season.

Thus the Bears officially qualified to meet the Eastern champion—probably the Washington Redskins—in professional football's championship game, December 19, at Chicago's Wrigley Field.

This was a remarkable game for the audacious Cardinals, who had lost nine straight league contests.

They led the Bears at the outset, 7 to 0. The North Siders tied the count in the second period on a 15-yard pass from Luckman to Harry Clark.

Nagurski Came Through

The Cardinals moved ahead, 10 to 7, on a 9-yard field goal by Conway Baker and then trailed, 14 to 10, at the half after Sid had hurled 35 yards to Hampton Pool.

In the third period the rambunctious Cardinals blasted out two touchdowns for a 24-14 margin. But in the last period the Bears counted three times, first on a 1-yard plunge by Bronko Nagurski, second on a 25-yard throw from Luckman to Clark, which sent the new champs in front, 28 to 24, and a third time on a 10-yard pass from Luckman to George Wilson.

A pro-Cardinal gathering of 17,219 who shivered in windy Comiskey Park cheered boisterously as Johnny Grigas plunged over for a Card score in the first period.

In the third period the Cards came from behind on Bob Morrow's touchdown from the 3 and went far ahead on Grigas' second score, on a run of 28 yards.

But the Bears wore them down at last in the final period to win.

Touchdowners To Hear Henry

A review of the war situation and memories of the 1932 Olympic Games will be stressed by Bill Henry, nationally famous broadcaster and sports columnist, when he addresses the weekly luncheon of the Touchdown Club tomorrow at 12:30 p. m.

Henry, who has visited every war front in the world and who has been an outstanding sports columnist around Los Angeles for 20 years, was technical director of the Olympic Games of 1932.

Phil-Pitts Smash Redskins, 27 to 14

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Roy Zimmerman returned to Griffith Stadium in a role exceeding his fondest dreams yesterday, steering the Phil-Pitt Eagles to a startling 27-14 triumph over the Redskins, who took their first defeat in 17 league games in dazed fashion before another full house.

The halfback traded with "good riddance" for two players who watched from the bench the full 60 minutes operated the Eagles T-formation in masterful fashion and at the end the Eagles had rolled up a ratio of six yards to one on the ground and stopped the 'Skins' offense until it was too late.

The Redskins thus met up with an embarrassing delay in clinching the Eastern Division pennant. With two games with the New York Giants remaining the 'Skins need only a tie to clinch a berth in the December 19 play-off with the Chicago Bears, but the multiple complications include a triple tie should the Giants win both games and the Eagles beat the Green Bay Packers next week. The Bears earned a berth in the championship game, winning 35-24 over the Cardinals with 21 fourth period points after a three-quarter scare.

Eagles' Line Effective

The Eagles' line shook a quartet of ball carriers loose for 297 yards through the Redskin line, using cross-blocking, shifting and charging tactics which opened gaping holes on offense but closed clamlike on defense to limit the Redskins' running game to a meager 58 yards.

In workmanlike fashion the Eagles marched 62 and 61 yards to touchdowns in the first and third periods, blanking the 'Skins until Sammy Baugh pitched a touchdown pass with four seconds remaining in the third period.

It was Zimmerman, who occupied the role of Baugh's understudy for three years on the Redskin bench, who intercepted a Baugh pass when the Redskins were marching for the tying touchdown in the fourth period. The Eagles roared back for a third touchdown and 90 seconds later took a 27-6 lead by blocking Baugh's attempted quick kick, recovering on the 1-foot line. Another Baugh aerial produced a score in the fading moments of one of the Redskins' most humiliating defeats.

The Redskins' fickle fandom, with memories of George Cafego's brilliant play against the Bears last week, twice booed Baugh, who for seven years has carried the Redskins on his mighty shoulders, mildly the first time and then with a roaring razz when he replaced Cafego after the latter pitched a 35-yard pass to Frank Seno.

Penalties, Sun and Eagles

The Eagles were aided by repeated offside and backfield-in-motion penalties by the Redskins which helped the winners out of several tight spots, and the sun, which has made Griffith Stadium's leftfield the most despised late-afternoon spot in the American League for many years. Twice Old Sol blazed in the eyes of Redskin passcatchers who had potential touchdown passes all but in their arms.

Redskins' Willie Wilkin and Clyde Shugart and Eagle Ben Kish were banished from the game for fighting and Wilbur Moore and Steve Slivinski had jerseys torn from their backs in the rough, sometimes vicious play.

With the exception of a 46-yard Baugh to Moore pass in the first half the Redskins were bottled so effectively in the first 30 minutes they showed exactly 23 yards gained as they trailed by a 7-0 count at intermission. They spent most of the time chasing Eagle ball-carriers.

Eagle touchdowns were traceable to the driving, spinning and weaving tactics of the former Syracuse halfback, Jack Hinkle, who poured through the Redskin line for 122 yards for the day, the speed of Ernie Steele, who in an amazing piece of fleet-footedness went 47 yards for a touchdown, and the power of Bob Thurbon, who supplied the punch for two touchdowns by rushing with such power through the Redskin line his drive carried him tumbling all the way through the end zone. Zimmerman, on effective quarterback sneaks, had his hand in the ball carrying in addition to handling the ball on every offensive play from his position snug against the center.

The Eagles marched 61-yards midway in the first period but

Ivory Scarce As Baseball Parley Starts

By Sid Feder

New York, Nov. 28—(AP)—Baseball's winter meetings, which ordinarily provide a busy market in player material, open for a week's run tomorrow, but about the only "ivory" in sight will be an elk's tooth dangling from a delegate's watch chain.

The bottom has just about dropped out of the ivory market, partly because any guy who has some on hand is hanging on to it, and partly because the traders, as they gathered today, had a lot more important things to think about.

Chief of these, naturally, is what kind of stew is on the fire for 1944 for both major and minor leagues, as well as what's cooking for the end of the war and the time the diamond industry will get back to business as usual—instead of "as best we can."

A committee of three will be named to get things ready for that day.

New Faces Sought

Most of the magnates still will be looking for new faces and the few minor deals that might be made, but the boss-men now are convinced that a bird on the roster is worth two in a trade, particularly if the bird can hit within shouting distance of .300, can throw a reasonable facsimile of a curve and can go after a fly ball without fear of being decapitated.

The result is all hands are playing it close in the current meetings.

Scheduled are separate sessions for minor leagues Monday and Tuesday, and the annual party of the National Association (the minors) on Wednesday, to be followed by the major look get together.

And there will be a fancy fuss or two to make it pretty warm for November. The majors have to settle a few things like a boost in the number of night ball games (wanted by Washington and the St. Louis Browns and Cardinals, and a raise in the player limit (a particular desire of the Yankees). Then, too, there may be a lecture from one K M. Landis, who, remember, is a whole lot better than a green hand at making with the lecture.

The minors have enough hot stuff on their agenda to make a Mexican chile party sound like an ice cream social. They're in for a real "rassle" over National Association vote control. The American Association and International League double-A loops, want the vote values changed from one per league to 10 for a double-A loop, 8 for a A-1, 6 for an "A," etc., down to for Class D.

Giants Retain Hopes, Defeat Dodgers, 24-7

New York, Nov. 28 (AP).—Steve Owen's New York Giants struck early and then coasted to a 24-7 interborough triumph today over the Brooklyn Dodgers while 28,706 watched and listened to the loud speakers tell them that Washington's loss kept the Polo Grounders in the National Football League pennant race.

There are more "if" bets in the Giants' flag hopes than in a five-horse parlay, but the New Yorkers can force a tie playoff in the Eastern Division of the league if they can upset the Redskins twice on the next two Sundays. The Philadelphia-Pittsburgh entry also remains in the picture.

It was Bruiser Kinard, a candidate for an all-league post at tackle whom Coach Pete Cawthon moved to end as an experiment, who scored all seven Dodgers points.

The Giants connected in the first two minutes on their second play after getting possession of the ball. After Paschal picked up 27 around left end to the 14, Cuff battled his way for the six-pointer.

Paschal carried most of the burden in a New York 45-yard drive that clicked for another touchdown midway in the second period and romped over from the 8 with nobody near to disturb him.

After Cuff had broken loose around end for a 30-yard gain a few plays later, the Giant attack stalled on a 15-yard holding penalty but Cuff went back and booted home a field goal at a tough angle.

Al Blozis and Steve Pritko smashed through to block Dean McAdams' punt in the closing minutes of the third quarter and the Giants recovered on the Brooks 36. Five plays later Paschal added the final score when he took Tufly Leeman's 10-yard toss on the 14 and went over.

Lee Registers 6-to-0 Victory Over Monroe

Camp Lee, Va., Nov. 28 (AP).—Beating Fort Monroe by a 6-0 score here today, Camp Lee set the stage for a game involving the Virginia service championship against Richmond Air Base next Sunday.

The lone touchdown of the game came after Elmer MacPherson, bruising Lee fullback, kicked skillfully from the Monroe 30 to the gunners' one. After Lee received the subsequent Monroe kick on the Gunners' 38, MacPherson paced a drive that carried to the visitors' 20.

Generoso Laluna, Lee passing ace, heaved an aerial to Jesse Alex Peterson on the six and followed with a pass to Soddy Groat, who raced over for the score.

Cage Bears Beat Zollners, 45 to 24

The Lichtman Bears took in hand yesterday at Turner's Arena the Fort Wayne Zollners, only team to defeat them in 43 starts during the past two seasons, and gave them a 45-24 drubbing before some 900 fans.

"Puggy" Bell and "Pop" Gates led the way with seven points each in the first of three periods. Bob McDermott and "Long Johnny" Pelkington were the chief scorers for the Indianians.

The final period demonstrated the easy mastery of the Lichtman team, when they had the ball at will, and scored six baskets.

Bout Slated 10 Rounds At Uline's

By Al Costello

Frankie Wills comes up for another test tonight at Uline Arena, meeting the talented Ernie "Cat" Robinson, hard punching Negro welterweight from New York, in the featured 10-rounder of Promoter Goldie Ahearn's good-looking fight card of 34 rounds.

The local welterweight champion, who looks like a champ in one outing and a preliminary boy the next, once more finds himself on the verge of getting someplace. Twice before he reached the brink only to topple back into mediocrity. For instance, there was the time last winter when he was supposed to go places. Along came untouted Ken Stribling, a New York Negro, and outpointed Wills, decisively.

Recovering from that, Frankie finally came back and boxed the ears off talented Al "Bummy" Davis and things looked rosy again. But a virtual unknown and unsung R. J. Lewis, another Negro from Denver, stepped in and whipped Wills easily. Both times Wills was on the doorstep of outstanding matches but failed those two final examinations.

Lost to Montgomery

Last summer against lightweight champion Bob Montgomery at the ball park he looked great for five rounds and was actually winning the fight but forced to make 144 pounds, 6 pounds under his best weight, weakened and Montgomery came on to win in the last stages. But that fight proved Wills can fight when he wants to. His showing against "Tiger Bob" was excellent.

Tonight, another Negro stands in his way of another top-flight bout, this time with Fritzie Zivic. "Cat" Robinson is a hard-puncher and a good boxer. "The Cat" recently knocked out Vinnie Vines in a Garden appearance and shaded Joe Agosto as well as earning a draw with the cagey Izzy Jannazzo. Robinson, too, wants a shot at Zivic and took this fight tonight with Wills with the understanding Promoter Ahearn would go after Zivic for the winner.

Both Hands Dynamite

Robinson's style makes for a good fight. He comes in ever-throwing and has dynamite in both hands. Wills, who is at his best as a counterpunchers, likes to meet a counterpuncher as he consistently is at his best when allowed to take the lead.

Crowding the main event, and either one may steal the spotlight, are two eight-rounders of promise. In the semifinal, Washington's Billy Banks takes on the up-and-coming Vic Creelman, a Coast Guardsman out of New York, owner of 28 straight victories. Vic has won four straight here, while Banks recently knocked off Pedro Hernandez and was going good against Chalky Wright before suffering a closed eye which necessitated stopping the fight.

The other eight finds slugging Sailor Eddie White, who has four straight kayoes here to his credit, meeting stronger opposition in "Li'l Abner" Powell, a tough Negro heavyweight. Powell registered by a knockout in his last appearance two weeks ago on the Baksi-Marshall card as did White. Somebody should get stiffened here.

Hinkle Makes Nine Yards—Despite Moore

BUSY DAY FOR WILBUR—Eagles' Jack Hinkle is carried out of bounds by Redskin Wilbur Moore after a 9-yard gain in the third period. Joe Aguirre and Wee Willie Wilkin approach the play from the rear. Hinkle, who gained 122 yards for the day, was an important figure in the Eagles' 27-14 triumph settled for a field goal attempt by Zimmerman which was wide from the 25-yard line. With Steele, Hinkle, Zimmerman and Johnny Butler alternating the ball carring they came back 62-yards for a touchdown with only four seconds remaining in the first period, Thurbon scoring on his first play in the game.

Phil-Pitts Smash Redskins in Upset, 27-14

Zimmerman added the extra point on three touchdowns, missing the fourth when it was blocked.

The Eagles also tossed in a 47-yard spurt which was short of a score in the first period when Thurbon fumbled on the Redskins' 10-yard line, using long, shovel laterals by Zimmerman and an occasional pass in wisely mixing the attack.

A spectacular over-the-shoulder catch of a Baugh pass by Moore was the Redskins' only offensive threat of the first half play which carried to the Eagles' 14. But after Andy Farkas made two yards Baugh missed Joe Aguirre, Andy Farkas and Alex Piasecky on intended touchdown pitches. Not one of them was even close.

The second half started in repetitious fashion. The Eagles took advantage of a 17-yard kick by Cafego to take the ball on their own 39-yard line and the Redskins were deaf to the crowds pleas of "hold that line" as the Eagles went through for 62 yards and Thurbon again on the score.

The only flaw in Zimmerman's performance for the day was his kicking and for the sixth time this season a blocked Eagle kick eventually became a touchdown. Tackle Joe Zeno broke through to smother a Zimmerman punt before it left his foot on the Eagle 22 and George Smith recovered the ball which bounded favorably for the Eagles on the Eagle 33. Baugh shot a first down pass to Masterson on the 21 and Baugh and Moore again worked the modified version of the Statue of Liberty play for another first down on the Eagle four. On the next play Baugh placed Masterson wide and leveled a short toss which Bob took on the two and scampered over, then adding the extra point.

Zimmerman Intercepts Pass

Zimmerman's pass interception ended Redskin hopes of a tie the next time they handled the ball, and after End Tony Bova sneaked into the backfield and went for a first down on the Redskin 49, Steele supplied the punch. Three downs produced 8 yards, and when Steele smashed the line, hoping for 2 yards, he burst through with such speed he went all the way, 43 yards, pulling away from Redskin pursuers with each step.

A great tackle by Tom Miller downed Andy Farkas on the 5-yard line on the kickoff return, and when Baugh crouched in quick-kick fashion Vic Sears blocked the kick and it was recovered on the 1. Hinkle went over for the score which made it 27-6.

With only seven minutes remaining and hopelessly beaten, the Redskins scored once more and then were stopped again on the 4-yard line at the gun.

Farkas returned the ensuing Eagle kickoff 40 yards on a commendable bit of maneuvering through the Eagles and personally made a first down at midfield in two plays. Cagego was running the team on this set of downs and just as it appeared he was trapped as he dropped back to pass he shot a long aerial while off balance to Frank Seno, who made contact with the ball and moved to the 12 before Steele brought him down from behind. Steele was the fastest man seen in Griffith Stadium since George Case packed up his spikes.

The crowd booed as Baugh replaced Cafego, but the thoughtless jeer was stifled in its throat as Baugh whipped a hard pass which Joe Aguirre leaped for and caught high over Zimmerman's head for a touchdown. Aguirre added the extra point.

The Redskins missed another touchdown only because Steele was faster than Farkas. The fleet-footed Eagle brought Andy down from behind on the four-yard line after Farkas moved 55 yards on a long pass from Baugh. The clock ran out before the Redskins lined up.

Baugh's 55 and 46 yard pass plays to Moore and Farkas helped Slingin' Sam to 172 yards gained on 12 completions in 25 attempts. Baugh turned out successive kicks of 59, 52 and 64 yards. The Eagles, resorting to the air at scattered intervals, made 82 yards, most of that with Larry Cabrelli on the end of Zimmerman or Sherman passes.

The Redskins lost Wilkin and Shugart in the third period and the Eagles lost Kish in the player fight which cost the three players automatic fines of $50 each. Baugh passed to Masterson, who was stopped by Ray Graves and when the latter insisted on hanging on after Masterson was obviously through running, but still standing, Wilkin cuffed Graves and Kish rushed in and punched Wilkin. Shugart claimed he was innocent but the referee said Clyde tossed a hidden punch in the proceedings.

Hardest working Redskin was Wilbur Moore, whose brilliant offensive work on pass catching and the execution of the modified statue was actually overshadowed by his stellar defensive play. He limped off the field, suffering a leg sprain in the fourth period after terrorizing the Eagles with repeated crushing tackles in the secondary.

Eddie Michaels, with the Redskins in 1937, and Eberle Schultz, an All-American at Oregon State, supplied the drive at guard which carried the Eagle backs to consistent gains through the line. Vic Sears and Frank Kilroy were standouts at tackle and Ray Graves at center and the substitutes in the line worked effectively as relief men.

The defeat was the first in league competition for the Redskins since the second game of the last season when Zimmerman was on the Redskin bench. "It was the happiest day of my life," Zimmerman said after the game, adding he "didn't have any grudge against the swell guys on the Redskins, but I got even with one man." When Baugh left the game in the last period, Zimmerman rushed to the side of the field and shook Sam's arm vigorously, an act that earned him a round of applause.

'Greasy' Neale Might as Well Have Used Semaphore, Wigwag

If Phil-Pitt Eagle Coach Greasy Neale comes up with a sore arm today it's his own fault. The head man on the staff of Neale and Walt Keisling was signaling from the bench throughout the afternoon yesterday, tipping plays off with salutes, grabbing his knee, clasping his hands together, waving his arms, etc. It was so obvious the Redskins got to know the signals and he was forced to vary them a bit in the second half. The habit was nothing new to Neale, who has been signaling from the bench all his life, but in the excitement of the upset triumph his actions were more pronounced.

The ball changed hands within a minute early in the first period when Hinkle intercepted a Baugh pass and Baugh recovered a Butler fumble . . . Dick Farman again watched the game from the sidelines in civilian clothes . . . Joe Aguirre got his signals mixed and, on what he apparently thought was supposed to be an end around, turned only to run smack into Moore, to toss him for a three-yard loss.

The day's injuries amounted to Moore's sprained leg, an aggravation of an old elbow hurt to Lou Rymkus and a cut in Eagle Bob Thurban's lip which required three stitches. . . . The Redskins may be champions of the pro league, but after the 14-14 tie and yesterday's triumph the Eagles are certainly champions of the Redskins. . . . Unless Harry Clark had a good day against the Chicago Cardinals Eagle Jack Hinkle will take over as the league-leading ground-gainer. . . . Baugh has now tosed 22 touchdown passes, but must click for 7 in the next two games to break Sid Luckman's record set yesterday of 28 in a season. Baugh undoubtedly will pass Luckman in completions and percentage but will trail in yardage barring two record-breaking single-game performances in that department in succession. . . . The Redskins take full advantage of the unlimited substitution rule in the fullback slot. Farkas and Seymour are in and out more often than the water boy. And speaking of water boys, if you think the Eagle bench wasn't excited then how about the fellow who ran to the bench after a time out, leaving the bucket smack on the 50-yard line? . . . The game was the slowest of the season, with more than the maximum of time-outs, penalties and the loss of time when the officials had to measure for first downs on six occasions—all Eagle first downs, by the way.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Readers Continue To Define Bureaucrat

This is another attempt to get an acceptable definition of a BUREAUCRAT. You can take your choice of the following supplied by readers of this column:

Paraphrasing St. Luke, Eleventh Chapter, Forty-sixth Verse: Woe be unto yet bureaucrats, for ye load men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

A public servant appointed by the opposition.

BUR—to stop or impede.

EA—a diety of the supreme triad (in a theological system of the Babylonians).

CRAT—member of government.

Therefore, the true meaning of bureaucrat is a government official who is an impeding godamighty.

Simple. Bureaucrats are people we can get along without very well.

A devotee of interoffice pingpong, played with memos, directives, rules, regulations and executive orders.

A person who says "yes" before he knows what you want.

A person who takes a 10-page memo to say "no."

A person who won't give you an answer even if he knows the right one, but instead refers you to another bureaucrat who in turn refers you to someone else and so forth. After several days of rough riding on the bureaucratic merry-go-round you're certain to be referred back to the first bureaucrat who started you off on your educational tour of the bureaucratic catacombs. But have patience, mister, you'll get an answer eventually.

The original "too little" and "too late" man.

You really want to know?
A poser—I have mused on that
And will attempt to show.
They sit within their sanctuaries,
Have one to 'umpty secretaries,
Emit with great fecundity
Memoranda of profundity.
Propound the rules one's governed by—
Not he himself—just the other guy.
He's the swivel chair strategist
Who rules o'er his domain,
And he's the guy who tops the list
Of folks who give me pain.
Familiar four syllables
Are often used with reference
To him and his whole ancestry
Without a trace of deference.
You still want a definition?
Sorry—But I could hint;
A Shakespearean appellation
That good newspapers don't print.

GAN.

Agriculture Department's magazine, "USDA," has started an interesting series on BUREAUCRATS which gives a startling view of the species. The first article, addressed to the department's employes, says in part:

Bureaucrat has become a nasty word of reproach. Did you do anything to make it that? For you are a bureaucrat, did you ever think of that? You are a bureaucrat because you work in a large institution organized vertically into bureaus . . . Every large institution that transacts public business is organized bureaucratically, railroads, insurance companies, department stores, etc. How good or bad a bureaucracy is depends upon the quality of the human beings who run it.

To inspire you to become admirable instead of repulsive bureaucrats, we shall tell you about notable department bureaucrats.

Marion Dorset became a bureaucrat in 1894 when he entered the Bureau of Animal Industry as an assistant chemist. Hog cholera was costing farmers 25 million dollars annually. The disease was attributed to a bacterium, but Dorset proved it to be caused by a filtrable virus, and he developed a crystal-violet vaccine before his death in 1935 that was highly effective in protecting hogs. But Dorset's discovery also led to the finding that yellow fever, smallpox, measles and other ills were caused by viruses. His work has been classified along with that of Pasteur and Koch.

Dorset also devised the indelible and harmless marking fluid used in the Federal grading of meats. These and many more inventions saved the Government and the people millions annually. Yet the cost of his biochemic division was only $130,000 a year and he received $5600 annually.

Yes, Dorset was a great bureaucrat and an exceptional one. This column will be glad to use good and horrible examples of a bureaucrat. Send in yours. Maybe we can rout out the bad ones or at least we'll try to inspire them by the good deeds of their colleagues.

Trinity Church Observes 50th Anniversary

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION—Among the participants in the service marking 50 years in the present location of Trinity Episcopal Church yesterday are, left to right: the Rev. D. M. Young, rector emeritus; Mrs. Homer Guerry, who has been a member since the founding of the church; 5-year-old Nancy Gates and the Rev. Reno S. Harp, jr., rector.

Pastor Celebrates 40th Year In Church of Nativity Pulpit

REV. MR. THOMPSON

The Rev. Enoch M. Thompson, rector and founder of the Nativity Episcopal Church, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his service yesterday at the church which simultaneously observed its fortieth anniversary.

The minister, who has given most of his life to the small congregation, said that while figures alone could not tell the story of the church's growth, they indicated how the handful of charter members and their successors had aided the pastor.

"Our records show that 1917 baptisms have been performed in the 40 years," Mr. Thompson said. "We have had 1643 confirmations, 2428 communicants have been received, 451 couples have been married and 1193 funeral services have been conducted."

The Rev. William Pence James of Lanham, Md., guest preacher, reminded that Christ's words, "What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his own soul," set forth the truth needed by men today as much as when Jesus spoke 2000 years ago.

Mr. Thompson started the Nativity Church in 1903, while he was assistant recor at St. Paul's Church near Washington Circle, where the late Bishop Alfred Harding, second Bishop of Washington, was rector. He continued his interest in the Nativity Church while assistant at Assension Church, from 1906 to 1908, when he started what is now the Ressurection Chapel.

Family of Five Budgets 22% To Buy Bonds

MR. ROBERTS

When Mr. and Mrs. John M. Roberts, 809 21st st. nw., discuss war bonds, they're talking about a considerable item in a budget in which three children have to be taken into account.

Roberts, a senior office machine operator for the National Capital Housing Authority, has been alloting 22 per cent of his salary for the purchase of a $50 bond a month.

War bonds are a familiar item, too, in their budget. Mrs. Roberts started their war savings program when it was a "defense" program, buying some of the first stamps to be issued. Before long, the couple were buying bonds, and they've been at it ever since. Roberts explains:

MRS. ROBERTS

"An uncle of mine was killed in France in the last war, and I've a brother in the field artillery in this one. I feel it's my duty to buy bonds. I want a free country."

He and Mrs. Roberts buy only what clothes they must have. And they "don't see any shows any more." They make an outing of their walk to and from church every Sunday, having sold their car—and put some of the proceeds into bonds. Evenings, Roberts studies accounting.

"If you budget yourself," he says, "you'll do quite a bit more than you thought you might."

3 Youths Captured In Stolen Car, Held

Captured in a stolen automobile at 9th st. and Constitution ave. nw. last night, three youths, one 16 and the others 19, were held for investigation in connection with several other recent car thefts.

Motorcycle Policeman R. G. Ducote spotted the car from its tag numbers and took the trio into custody. The car, police said, was stolen from Ben Seidel in the 400 block 9th st. nw. Saturday night.

1000 Pray For Victory, Honor Rosary

More than 1000 persons reconsecrated their lives to the Rosary yesterday afternoon at a crusade of prayer for victory and peace sponsored by the Notre Dame de Namur Alumnae at St. Aloysius Church, North Capitol and I sts.

The Rev. James J. McLarney, professor of sacred eloquence at the Dominican House of Studies, said "our people have let the Rosary go out of fashion. Families have forgotten the Rosary and the whole world has lost its reward.

"We have gathered here this afternoon to honor the Rosary," he continued. "I am asking you now to reconsecrate yourselves and your families to the Lady of the Rosary—the Mother of God."

Father McLarney said that in this time of war, Catholics should remember Jesus' legacy from the cross. He reminded that Christ left no money, his clothes were taken over by gambling soldiers, and there was no material wealth bequeathed by the dying Christ.

"But in that dark hour, He looked down at the Lady of Victory the Queen of Peace, who stood with Him in His suffering," Father McLarney said. "And to those around Him, Jesus said 'Behold, thy mother!' That was his inheritance to us."

The celebrant of the solemn benediction was the Very Rev. Lawrence J. Shehan, pastor of St. Patrick's Church. The Rev. Francis E. Garner, headmaster at Gonzaga College, was the deacon and the Rev. Walter J. Schmitz of the Theological College of the Catholic University of America, was subdeacon. The master of ceremonies was the Rev. Henri J. Wiesel, pastor of St. Aloysius Church.

MP's Preferred

Dog Disdains Civilians As Common

He isn't much bigger than a muff, this little dog which associates with MP's only.

His family escutcheon is crisscrossed with bar sinisters until it looks like a lattice-work screen. His name, so far as anyone knows is "Come'ere" and it is only effective when used by an MP. He holds all civilians in high disdain.

Yesterday afternoon "Come'ere" was on duty with the guard at 17th st. and New York ave. nw. Back and forth they went across the blocked-off street. When the guard stopped the little dog curled up and rested.

The only response to an effort to make his acquaintance was a slow yawn. Then he looked up at one of his many masters, curled himself up a little tighter, spread a bushy tail over his nose and went to sleep.

Horace White

New York, Nov. 28 (AP).—Horace White of Syracuse, Governor of New York in 1910, died here today following a heart attack in a hotel. He was 78 and president of the Post-Standard Co., publishers of the Syracuse Post-Standard.

Rev. Reno S. Harp Reviews History Of Congregation

Trinity Episcopal Church, founded in the year of the 1893 panic, has proved that the character of its charter members handed as a heritage to their children is more important than hazardous outward circumstances, the Rev. Reno S. Harp, jr., rector, declared yesterday at the fiftieth anniversary celebration.

The service marked half a century's worship in the present location at Piney Branch rd. and Dahlia st. nw. Assisting at the service were the Rev. H. Allen Griffith, under whose leadership the First Trinity Church was built and opened in 1893, the Rev. C. M. Young, rector emeritus of the parish, and the Rev. Henry C. Parkman, former dean of the Southern convocation.

"While 50 years makes many outward changes, the important things such as family life and church remain the same," Mr. Harp declared. He reminded that Trinity Church was founded in hectic times but character had survived, and that the entire Christian church will stand above the present crisis of war.

A highlight of the observance was completion of payment of all parish indebtedness, which resulted from the building program inaugurated by the present rector in 1936. Approximately $85,000 has been spent in erection of the present stone church and rectory. The church has a membership of more than 800.

Elks Minstrels Will Entertain At Forest Glen

Washington Lodge No. 15 B.P.O. Elks minstrel troupe will entertain the convalescent patients at Walter Reed Hospital Annex, Forest Glen, Md. tonight at 7:30.

With Al Stern, Herb Leach, Ralph Delaverne, Mose Kendrick, Jim Mullins and Harry Traub as end men, Ted Campbell as interlocutor, and a chorus of twenty, the troupe will present comedy, song and dance acts.

A feature of the show is the trio with Milt Jones, Ted Campbell and Joe Crowley. There also is a Floradora sextet number directed by Natalie Core of The Willard Roof Garden Players.

Seaman Art Show Opens At Corcoran

The art exhibition of merchant seamen of the United Nations which opened yesterday afternoon at the Corcoran Gallery indicates the day of the "Yo ho ho and a bottle of rum" sailors is over and done.

No less an authority than Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, War Shipping Administrator, can be quoted to this effect, for, after viewing the canvases, he said: "These pictures by men who are delivering vital supplies to the fighting front are striking evidence that merchant seamen are first class citizens."

The exhibit, which includes 79 paintings selected from 240 entries, will remain at the Gollery through December 24.

David Pascolesca, a 25-year-old New York seaman, won the first award with his "Don Quixote" series showing four incidents in the adventures of the windmill knight.

The second prize, "Young Man With Violin," is an oil by Reginald P. Packard. The third prize, "Shrimp Boats," Biloxi, Miss., is also an oil, painted by George F. Heuston, the only professional artist in the exhibit.

Another of the 39 artists featured in the exhibition is Joe Richards, also of New York, a ship's carpenter who painted a memorial tribute to Carl G. Hill, an artist lost at sea titled, "Man Overboard", it is grouped with five paintings by Hill, including a self portrait.

Admiral Land paused for some time in front of the memorial and, as he turned away, said:

"To profess astonishment at the work of fine seamen-artists is, in my opinion, to confess ignorance. Seamen have always been men of broad and humane sympathies, as attested by their manifold personal interests. And we see these sympathies reflected in the work of seamen-painters selected for inclusion in the present exhibition."

Prince Georges Police Shoot 2 Dogs in D. C.

Two instances of Prince Georges County police shooting dogs which were on the District side of the line have been reported to Superintendent of Police Edward J. Kelly, it was revealed last night.

Both occurred on Nov. 10 in the 5000 block of Fields pl. ne. In one instance it was reported that a spent bullet ricocheted through a window.

Mrs. Mildred Alfred, Negro, of 5818 Fields pl. ne., whose house is about 75 yards across the line in the District, reported the shooting of her dog, which was in her own yard, and the breaking of a window in her house. A few days later a sergeant from the Prince Georges force came to the house to pay for the window.

The other instance was reported by Mrs. Anna Mae Brown, Negro, of 5825 Fields pl. ne., who said that 17 days later a member of the Prince Georges force took her to the county pound to select another dog, police said.

Arthur Catterall

London, Nov. 28 (AP).—Arthur Catterall, 59, famed violinist and leader of the BBC Symphony Orchestra from 1929 to 1936, died today at a hospital in suburban Stanmore.

Government Girls Plan Show

The Government Girl Club yesterday played host to prospective members at a holiday tea held in St. John's parrish hall, and heard Lillian Shepley of The Post advertising staff describe plans for a fashion show to be presented by The Post and the club the latter part of January.

The selection of models for the show, she said, will be made December 21 at Arlington Farms with noted artists picking typical Government girls to display clothes that will be chosen because they fit the needs as well as the paycheck of the average Government worker.

Entertainment for the tea consisted of games designed to make the girls familiar with each others names, music furnished by Sid Willoughby, Bob Marshall, and Bob D'Arcy of Burts Trans-Lux Restaurant, and intimate songs played and sung by Hal Yates of the Olmstead Grill. Winners of the games were presented with boxes of cosmetics contributed by the firms of Elizabeth Arden, Helena Rubinstein, and Emile.

Guests of honor in addition to the girls who have applied for membership included Harry F. Hubbard of the Council of Personnel Administration, Mrs. Hubbard, Mrs. Frances Kelly, Assistant Director of Personnel for the Department of Commerce, and Jerry Kluttz, Post columnist who originated the Government Girl Campaign to buy planes for the Army and Navy and which sponsored the orginization of the club.

The executive committee assisted by Miss Laura Nicholson of Home Hospitality and a counselor of the club was in charge of arrangements. The president, Mrs. Lenora Haag, a member of the White House secretarial staff, announced that new members were still being accepted and could obtain information about the organization from their employe counselor, personnel office, or by writing to Government Girl, Box 336.

Celebrate Golden Wedding

GOLDEN WEDDING anniversary was celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bradshaw of 2634 12th st. ne. last night.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bradshaw of 2634 12th st. ne., who first met when they were attending grade school in Southeast Washington and married soon after they graduated, yesterday celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

More than 100 friends and relatives crowded their home in the day long party which was marked by the cutting of a wedding cake, the presentation of a new wedding band and a long distance call from a granddaughter, Miss Ruth McCullough in Texas. Present were their three children, Mrs. Anna M. McCullough and David and Richard Bradshaw.

Mr. Bradshaw, a retired carpenter, was in complete agreement with his wife when she described the principal ingredient of matrimonial harmony as being a mutual give and take.

3 Women Are Injured In Traffic

Two women pedestrians were struck by an automobile driven by a learner when the car jumped the curb, and another woman was critically hurt when she was dragged 26 feet by the fender of a streetcar.

Most seriously injured was Sandra Moore, 19, of 1425 Columbia rd. nw., who was knocked down and pushed by the streetcar. She suffered a fractured right leg and possibly a fractured skull. Physicians at Casualty Hospital said her condition was critical.

Police reported the accident occurred at Third st. and Pennsylvania ave. se. The streetcar was operated by John A. Evans, 26, 929 G st. nw.

Mrs. Bessie Switzer, 52, 3319 Ely pl. se., and a neighbor with whom she was walking, Mrs. Margaret E. Longone, 37, of 3236 Ely pl., were felled at Minnesota and Pennsylvania aves.

They were standing at the intersection when a car operated, according to police, by Mrs. Catherine Shaw, 31, of 3122 M pl. se., a student motorist, jumped the curb, knocked down a tree box and a young tree and struck both women.

Mrs. Switzer was taken to Gallinger Hospital, where she was said to have received a possible fractured skull and internal injuries.

A police scout car ambulance rushed Mrs. Longone to Casualty Hospital, where it was learned she suffered a sprained back and severe cuts.

'I Have Gun,' Bandit's Card Warns Victim

A young Negro bandit with a sinister calling card was being sought by police yesterday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, 33-year-old manager of the Colton Apartments, 49 I st. nw., said she was handed the card when she answered a knock on her door Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Smith said she glanced down and read, "Do not cry out. I have a gun."

Just then the bandit standing before her whipped out a nickle-plated pistol, she told police, and backed her into a bedroom, where he bound her hands to her ankles and gaged her with a handkerchief.

Leaving Mrs. Smith seated in the middle of the floor the bandit then pocketed $25 in cash, a wrist watch and a ring, both valued at $40, and left, police reported. He took the note with him. The valuables were taken from a jewelry box atop a dresser.

Mrs. Smith had the presence of mind to protrude her chin while the gag was being applied, so once the bandit was gone she relaxed her chin and the handkerchief fell loose, she said.

Then, according to her story to police, she got to her feet and with her hands still bound to her ankles hopped to a table in the room, knocked the telephone to the floor, managed to dial for the operator and yell for police.

Before police arrived, however, another resident of the apartment heard her cries and untied her.

Ellis B. Baker

Ellis B. Baker, 66, former secretary-treasurer of the Southern New England Telephone Co., who retired on August 1, 1941, died Saturday of a heart ailment.

He was the father of Capt. Ellis B. Baker 3d, U. S. A., of 3446 Gunston rd., Alexandria, Va.

A widow, daughter and two other sons survive. They are Capt. Marshall Ellis, Sacramento, Calif.; Albert Storrs Ellis, Patterson, N. J., and Mrs. Philip Hopkins, Holyoke, Mass.

Funeral services for Mr. Ellis, who was a native of Meriden, will be held tomorrow.

Wounded Soldiers Dined

OPA Berated by Proprietor of The Stables

Mrs. Jean Richards, operator of The Stables upper case riverside restaurant, yesterday accused the OPA of "Gestapo methods" in its refusal on November 18 to grant her a loan of 20,000 ration points. The intent, she implied in a letter to District OPA Director Robert K. Thompson, is "to destroy a citizen's business on the very childish claim that the business is not necessary."

"Thanks to your dictatorial attitude," Mrs. Richards wrote, "from a thriving, healthy, successful enterprise my business has deteriorated into sickliness." If this does not "satisfy your honorable board," she suggested, "the Potomac is only a few feet away and it should be a simple matter . . . for you to shove me into the river and drown me."

A "Mr. Osterman" of OPA had told her, she declared, that "there is no place in this country for a business of your kind." He implied, she added, "that the superior quality of my food and service was the objectionable feature, that superior food and superior service were more or less passe in time of war."

The Stables' business records, as well as a "definite plan of operation which should assure you of my ability to operate within the scope of rationing regulations," are at OPA's disposal, she wrote Thompson.

"Is it necessary for your honorable body to shove an innocent like me down . . . into Limbo?" she asked. "Why not just gently push me toward Heaven?"

News in Brief of the Wartime Capital

Two nursery schools sponsored by the District Board of Education will open this morning for the children of working mothers.

One of the schools at Langston Terrace, 24th st. and Benning rd. ne., is for Negro children, the first such school to be located in a housing development. The other will be at the Langdon School, 20th and Franklin sts. ne.

Applications for nursery care for children at the two schools will be accepted at 472 Indiana ave. nw., the office of the Services to Children of Working Mothers.

No Scalpers Arrested

For the first time in three weeks no arrests on ticket scalping charges were made at Griffith Stadium yesterday. Police said several scalpers were seen about the stadium, but that they were unable to catch any red handed. Five were arrested last Sunday.

Crippled Dog Hops Home

Seemingly unconcerned that police had been on the lookout for him and that his owners had searched all night, Willie, a 12-year-old, three-legged Scottie, came hopping home yesterday.

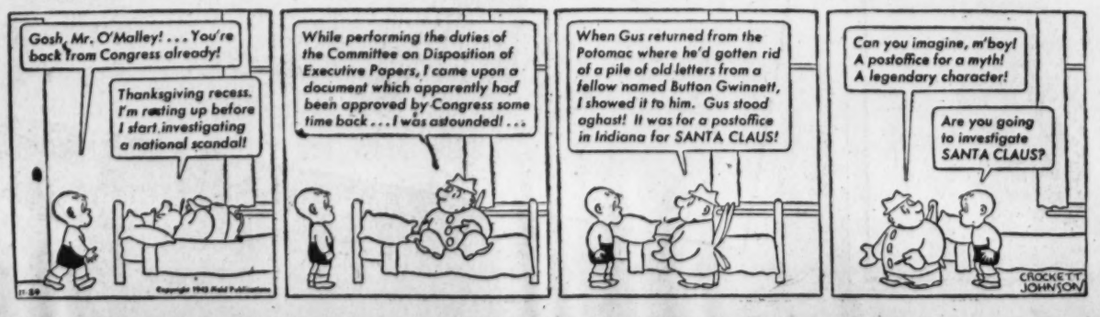
Willie's owners, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Swiggart, 1820 45th st. nw., called police after the dog went for a stroll and failed to return.

Soldier Stabbed

Pfc. Carl F. Reed, 22, attached to the Twenty-third Coast Artillery at Fort Rodman, Mass., was taken to Walter Reed Hospital last night with critical stab wounds suffered early yesterday in the 600 block of G st. nw.

Police said they were still seeking the assailant.

BARNABY By Crockett Johnson



Gosh, Mr. O'Malley! . . . You're back from Congress already!
Thanksgiving recess. I'm resting up before I start investigating a national scandal!
While performing the duties of the Committee on Disposition of Executive Papers, I came upon a document which apparently had been approved by Congress some time back . . . I was astounded! . . .
When Gus returned from the Potomac where he'd gotten rid of a pile of old letters from a fellow named Button Gwinnett, I showed it to him. Gus stood aghast! It was for a postoffice in Indiana for SANTA CLAUS!
Can you imagine, m'boy! A postoffice for a myth! A legendary character!
Are you going to investigate SANTA CLAUS?

Letter Home

(This column was written by request for the "immigrant" government worker who is the constant subject of the "Why don't you write?" plaint of her friends back home.)

To all those whose unanswered letters haunt my conscience:

No, I haven't "gone Washington," or become immersed in the pursuit of newer and finer friends or "contacts."

Only—after I have hammered a typewriter, or filed letters, or made out reports, or taken dictation eight hours a day, six days of the week; after I have carried several people home on my tired feet on streetcar or bus; after I have done my own marketing and cooking, or stood in an endless cafeteria line; after I have swept and dusted and scrubbed (unless I let it pile up for the weekend); after I have laundered blouses and underwear and stockings (no, there is no one I can "have in" to do it); after I have mended and shined and brushed and pressed to conserve what I have, as a financial necessity and a patriotic duty; after I have bathed and creamed and manicured and combed (so that visiting New Yorkers won't complain of my frowsy Jane College appearance); after I have snatched a glance at the newspaper headlines (so that my boss and investigating members of Congress won't find me too ignorant); after I have rushed through the day, my eyes constantly on the clock, and find that I have about seven hours of sleep before the alarm clock goes off (if I don't get that much I will be cheating Uncle Sam and the men at the front the next day); well after all that I have put off answering your letters until another day.

But on "another day" I have had to stand in line at the bank, or at the money order window at the postoffice where I send part of my pay check home; or I have had to write to my eager and too much neglected family; or to spend my evening getting my hair set; or to fight through the Thursday night shopping mobs to buy a few of the items on my long list of necessities; or to tramp pavements in my interminable and futile search for another room or apartment to replace my temporary haven.

Thus your unanswered letters continue to stare at me mute and reproachfully. So now, in reply to all your long neglected questions:

No, I haven't been invited to the White House. The Roosevelts apparently haven't heard of my arrival.

No, Mrs. Roosevelt has not as yet popped up either at my office or in my room.

No, not a single elderly (and rich) widower Senator has made me a marriage proposal, or even invited me to go dancing.

No, masculine wolves in taxis have not tried to lure me for any rides. All the taxis I see dash imperiously past me even when I am waving at them frantically.

No, I don't know any spicy gossip about big shots—at least none that I'd waste time repeating.

No, I haven't any inside information on how soon the war will be over.

No, I won't be home for Christmas. The fighting men aren't taking any time off, so why should I?

No, I haven't forgotten you—nor will I!

Finally, if you are true friends of mine, I know you will not want me to drive myself to write merely because I owe you a letter or fear you will be angry or hurt if I do not. I know you will not want me to go through my hurried, harried day weighted down by the guilty feeling that I must somehow, someway find time to answer your letters. I know rather that you will want me to let you wait, and to give now the best I have of my time and myself to helping win this war.

I also know that though thousands of miles and that months, even years, of silence may separate us, our friendship, if it is real, will live on; and that when we meet again, we will find we are still speaking the same language, traveling the same road, and will pick up where we left off.

YOUR FAITHFUL FRIEND.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Despite Jibes of Her Husband and Physician, Once-Tortured Neurotic Turned to Psychiatry And Was Healed in Mind and Body; Tells Story

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Perhaps you wonder at times what happens to the people who seek your advice, and then are heard from no more. I wrote you early in 1939; and now I feel it is time to thank you for the answer you gave, and to tell you how I have fared. My letter was published February 25, 1939, headed: "Tortured Neurotic Thinks Psychiatry Might Help Her. Husband and Physician Scoff. She Asks Advice." After reading your reply, I was encouraged by your indorsement of my hunch to see a psychiatrist, but I felt rather let down because you did not specifically recommend the person to consult.

Now, after almost five years, I fully appreciate how wise you were in letting me arrive at my own choice,—to which I was guided by a series of fortuitous events. My experience has been so fortunate that I would like to recommend psychiatry, for every basically worthwhile person who is in trouble. I emphasize the word "worthwhile," because I feel there are some basically inadequate people who cannot be helped. But then, they are probably also the kind of people who would never recognize or admit that their problems begin with themselves.

I pray, too, that some day soon all medical men will appreciate and prescribe psychiatry as freely as they now prescribe palliatives. I say this from a background of erstwhile illness that goes back more than 10 years, during which I had some of the highest-ranking physicians (both here and abroad) in attendance. I can conscientiously make an even more drastic statement. I know of at least one tuberculosis sanatorium,—where I put in 10 months,—where the addition of one or two good psychiatrists, on full-time duty, could restore at least 90 per cent of the "cure-takers" to permanent, happy social usefulness in the time it takes to arrest their organic disease. Furthermore, I will bet that, given psychiatric help, the organic healing time could be considerably shortened, too. If I had been given psychiatric treatment in time, my own breakdown would never have occurred!

The Power of Good Vs. Forces of Evil

MY SUCCESSFUL experience with psychiatric healing has convinced me that if we may believe, profitably, in the intangible power of good (as I have learned to do), we must also recognize that the forces of evil, just as intangible, are all around us; and that they are active in myriad spheres, in many guises. There really is no conflict between this newest science of psychiatry and ages-old dynamic religious teaching. And your own writings, Miss Haworth, indirectly reveal your clear perception of this truth.

IT IS unfortunate that there exists among supposedly "enlightened" people so much distrust of psychiatry as such. They should rather recognize the possibility of unscrupulous or mentally-limited individuals practicing it. Psychiatry, in good hands, helps to reinforce one's positive characteristics. It gives us insight into our basic selves and that insight-into-self provides (1) the impetus to total re-education; and (2) also enables us to penetrate the camouflage of others.

TO BRIEFLY recount my actual experience: I had only 10 sessions in all,—of 50 minutes each. I had the first seven sessions over a period of three weeks; and the remaining three over a period of three months, each a month apart. These sessions were terminated by mutual agreement, with the understanding that I could make a future appointment if I needed one. The entire cost was one-fifth of what I had spent for a completely futile major operation several years before. I invested painstaking effort, in the next 22 months, to reshaping circumstances to approximate the pattern I was given to see as my Way-of-Life; and this process of working things out ever nearer to the ideal will require hard work and vigilance for the rest of my life. But that IS Life.

She Learned to Know And Respect Herself

THE PSYCHIATRIST did not make a diagnosis. I did! I talked things out with myself, so to speak; but how eloquent he helped me to be! It was an indescribable relief to realize (1) that it was not too late to turn my misdirected gifts into healthy, creative channels; and (2) that all my transgressions and all the illnesses were due to ignorance of myself; and to circumstances over which I had no control. The last clause is important, because my greatest handicap was my previous failure to see that my past unfortunate experiences had been largely shaped by other factors than my own choice and intelligence. Some of these factors were very realistic,—including moves made by my parents during my childhood; my role as family breadwinner from 16 onward, etc. I had held the notion that I alone was responsible for everything that had ever gone wrong in my life.

AND I HAD felt, guiltily, that my attractive personality was only a charming "false front," camouflaging a character of dubious worth. I learned, instead, to realize that this was a true manifestation of my best self; that my innate joyous love of life and loveliness of soul were somehow managing to shine through. This may sound boastful to the reader. But it is a fairly objective recognition of fact that I can now experience with pride and gratitude. I made the discovery that my faults I feared were essentially harmless; that, paradoxically, the good traits misused were making havoc of my life!

She Pushes Aggressive Persons Away From Her

SINCE the therapy, in addition to effecting practical readjustments, I have undertaken the job of pushing away from me the aggressive personalities who have contributed heavily to my mismanaged past,—and whom I see clearly now for the esteem-consuming, selfish, ill-mannered persons they are, even though they pass as "very nice people!" Judging by the number I am getting rid of, I seem to have tolerated much too many of these in the past. How good it is for all concerned to accept only kindred spirits in closer association! I am sorry now that I passed by so many of them in my life. I seemed to be in such a rush; and they are not the clutching kind,—or else my masquerade was too garish. They turned away their faces. But they are all there,—plus the whole future.

IN CLOSING, I want to say, Miss Haworth, that your column is a unique, pioneering job, and its integrity and courage should redeem much of the timid, muddled thinking that emanates from the Nation's Capital. Personally, it is a source of great support, for your analyses of problems are so identical with my feelings about them that I frequently whoop for joy,—at my good fortune in knowing.

Engineers Taught Art Of Carving

Carving the Sunday meat, whether turkey or a side of beef, will be no problem for the cooks stationed with the Engineers at Belvoir when they return to civilian life.

Last week more than 200 mess sergeants and their assistants took an intensive three-day course in the art of carving a carcass. Although the course was not designed for postwar preparedness when meat will again appear on civilian tables, but rather to eliminate Army waste in the kitchen, there will be little that they learned that won't come in handy in the future.

Take for instance, the four rules that F. J. Boles of the National Livestock and Meat Board, who delivered the lecture and demonstrated the dos and don'ts, told the boys and girls never to violate. "Keep a zip lip (don't disclose the carte du jour)," he shaid. "Trim surplus fat and save it for baking and cooking purposes. Serve it hot, for hard-workers like hot food, and serve it cold; cold meats make excellent sandwiches."

Performing anatomical dissections with the butcher's scalpel, he demonstrated the proper technique and the best sections to carve. Bones, fats and ends were carefully separated from the frame of what had been a lamb and put aside for soup and stew. The importance of saving fat for baking purposes as well as for general cooking was stressed.

During a demonstration, Boles proved that virtually 100 servings can be obtained from one carcass.

"Practically every bit can be used and is edible," Boles told his students. "Proper carving will make the difference between conserving rations and wasting them."

The course, which was held in an amphitheater formed by bleacher seats, was attended by kitchen representatives from all nearby Washington encampments in addition to the Fort Belvoir contingent. WAC Pvt. Mary Sumner reduced a carcass in record time to a refrigerator full of choice steaks and the ingredients for cauldrons of soup.

Fort Belvoir, Va.—Expert meat conservation exponent, Mr. F. J. Boles representing the National Live Stock and Meat Board demonstrated the conservation of meats and fowl at a conference held here last week before more than 200 Army cooks and mess sergeants.

Help Shorten War by Ordering Regular 'Clean-Plate' Special

By Ida Jean Kain

When do YOU think the war will be over? Your guess is probably the same as that of your favorite expert. Whether it is a short war or a long one depends to a great extent on food—and the use we make of it.

Food is such a powerful weapon that this year's convention of the American Dietetic Association was nothing less than a war conference. Miss Jessie W. Harris of the Food Administration made it clear that not only does the duration of the war depend on food, but that of the peace that follows.

There is no danger, we are assured, of hunger in this country. But it is up to every one of us to make wise use of our food supplies.

We can't waste food. If you think the little bit you may have been throwing away doesn't count, here are some startling facts put out by the administration.

Our farmers have produced 31 per cent more food. In normal times we waste from 20 to 30 per cent of the food that is produced. We can save as much food as the production increase! See where you and I come in?

Clean plates are the symbol of the thrift and they must become the rule. Now, our speaker did not say this, but it is my belief that the person patronizing the more expensive eating places is the one who is most wasteful. When you eat out, order only what you can eat. Whenever you can't finish all the food on your plate, don't take dessert even though you are going to have to pay for it just the same.

Another way to speed up victory is to make wider use of the foods that are in season and abundant. Right now you can get all the Irish and sweet potatoes you want. Take advantage of the supply. We can all use more of the dried legumes, soya products, and green and yellow vegetables. And 1944 is recommended as the year to use ingenuity in serving beans, peas and corn. We are told that "we will have to learn to get a diet we like out of the foods that are available."

There's a third way to use food more wisely and score a direct hit for victory. Abide by rationing! Would you have suspected the main reason for rationing? It's too much money, not scarcity of food! More Americans are at work than ever before and they are spending more money for food.

Your Baby And Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Mothers are invariably sure their practices are unique, when, in truth, they react amusingly the same to the same situation.

For instance, some young Sandra won't eat eggs. She hates them, her mother explains, and she vomits them when they are forced on her. But where is the mother who is willing to be respectful of her own Sandra's peculiarities? The first thought of each mother is to devise some way to get her child to accept eggs without knowing that she is doing so.

These mythical Sandras dislike eggs not because their mothers want them to eat them. They are opposed to them because when they eat eggs something very unpleasant happens to them. They feel awful. Although they may not be able to explain the nature of their emotions, they are definitely against any food which causes such reactions.

Why not take it for granted that any baby who will not eat an egg or some other food knows that it would not be good for her if she did. Even if we hid the egg in a custard, the body isn't fooled, if the baby is. It is still egg, which is not tolerated by this child's body, for some reason that is beyond our capacity to understand or always measure.

Just accept these food peculiarities. They are real and not imaginary. If ignored they let loose a flood of allergic disturbances from eczema to asthma and all the ports between. It is foolish to think we can change them by pretending they do not exist.

Instead, let us determine to respect the child's unaccountable prejudices. This doesn't mean that because he spits out a new food the first few times he is served it, he is necessarily allergic to it.

But, when the child suffers a real digestive disturbance after eating eggs or wheat or fresh cow's milk, or what have you, we should recognize that those reactions are not whimsical. They are the body's reasons to something that displeases it. We won't get very far in curing the ailments which stem from these distastes unless we admit their validity.

Doctors Battling Hidden Foe, Tuberculosis, By New Case Finding Methods via the X-Ray

By Logan Clendening, M.D.

Again we urge you to spend as much as one to five dollars on the Christmas seals of the National Tuberculosis Association to continue a real war on one of mankind's most ancient and unrelenting foes.

Statistics show that there is very little unemployment in North America. That would mean that 80 million people could afford to buy one dollar's worth of stamps. Think what 80 million dollars would do to help!

The family physician is the head man in this fight just now.

We have had in the past two years a wider survey of the population to detect tuberculosis than ever before. The entire Army and Navy forces and a large proportion of industrial workers have been tested. So an ever increasing number of people are being advised to consult a physician for treatment. In most cases that means the family physician.

Family Physician's Duty

So whatever other interest he may have, the family physician must be a specialist in tuberculosis.

The detection of tuberculosis (of the lungs) in this mass survey has depended on the use of X-ray of the chest. That is the only safe and sure way of weeding out the active cases and the suspects.

The active case is readily determined by the X-ray and the procedure with them is the simplest of all decisions in this field. They need sanitarium treatment, and usually surgical collapse of the active lung, bed rest, and segregation from the rest of the patient's family until healing has taken place.

Diagnosis of 'Suspects'

In the suspected case the procedure is more complicated. The diagnosis "suspected" means that the X-ray man has found some hazy shadows that he is not perfectly sure of. The family physician will probably want to order another X-ray study more carefully done than is possible by mass X-raying, and make an examination of the sputum and by the stethoscope.

Observation of the patient, especially the daily temperature over a period of weeks will determine whether or not there is an actual active disease present. The decision of what form of treatment should be instituted will depend on the result of these studies.

Tuberculosis of the lungs tends to increase in prevalence from the age of adolescence on. Or rather it tends to become evident. It hangs on if not detected or treated for many years, but in older individuals the disease is more a source of danger to others than to themselves. They have established an immunity which often carries them to extreme old age.

These new case finding methods have initiated a large scale attack on unsuspected tuberculosis among apparently healthy persons. It is the duty as well as the opportunity of the family physician to carry it through.

Peripatetic Army Wife, Mother, Visits Here

Mrs. Wannie L. Bartley, Wife of Colonel, En Route to Son's Graduation From O. C. S.

By Elizabeth Henney

It's reunion time again in Washington for Mrs. Wannie L. Bartley of Fort Worth, Tex., and her host of friends here.

Mrs. Bartley, wife of Colonel Bartley, commandant of the Quartermaster Depot at Fort Worth, arrived in Washington on Wednesday for a two week's visit with her mother, Mrs. Samuel H. Burnside, and her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon B. Lowrey.

So, yesterday afternoon during the twilight cocktail hours, about 75 friends dropped in to the Lowrey's Georgetown home to welcome Mrs. Bartley back to town and to ask why she won't stay a little longer.

The reason she won't needs no elaboration, once she mentions it. It's simply that in a little more than two weeks Pvt. First Class Samuel H. Bartley, now stationed at Fort Davis, N. C., will be graduated from Officers' Candidate School, and, of course, proud mother is going to be on hand to pin those gleaming golden shoulder bars on the uniform of her oldest son.

A mother's duties are varied in this wartime and may take them to far places from time to time. Just recently Mrs. Bartley sped from Texas to Ardmore, Okla., there to take over as nursemaid and housekeeper-grandma for her daughter. The reason for that? Well, Son-in-Law Capt. Philip Rawlins of the U. S. Army Air Corps was on his way "out there." So, brown-haired, dark-eyed, vivacious "Grandma Bartley" simply said: "Be off with you, the two of you. I can handle the two colleens with no trouble at all."

And that is how Patricia and Philip were able to have such a gay and glorious honeymoon leave just before he went away. Aren't mothers wonderful?

Miss Helen McKee To Become Bride of Lieut. A. D. Simpson

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Nov. 28.—The engagement of Miss Helen Mar McKee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Rouse McKee of this city to Lieut. Archie Dulaney Simpson of Round Hill, Va., was announced yesterday at an "open house" at the home of her parents here.

Miss McKee was educated at Shepherd College here, and is now a member of the Leetown School teaching staff. She was the "beauty queen" at Shepherd in 1941, and a "princess" at the Winchester (Va.) Apple Blossom Festival the same year.

Lieutenant Simpson is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Archie Simpson and the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Thomas of Round Hill. He returned to the United States in December following a year's service in the South Pacific as a dive bomber pilot. In March, 1943, he was awarded the Air Medal and Presidential Citation, having participated in 34 bombing missions in enemy territory. Lieutenant Simpson also attended Shepherd College, where he was prominent in athletics.

A date for the wedding has not been announced.

Miss Anna Genevieve Fadden Is Bride of Lieut. W. G. McGuire

At high noon Saturday in the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, Miss Anna Genevieve Fadden, daughter of Mrs. Frank J. Fadden, and the late Mr. Fadden of Newport News, Va., was married to Lieut. William George McGuire, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. John McGuire, formerly of Worcester, Mass., now of Washington. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Msgr. James A. Smyth, and the Rev. Dr. John J. Coady, pastor of St. Anthony's Church, read the nuptial mass which followed. Several priests assisted in the sanctuary.

MRS. WILLIAM G. McGUIRE

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Dr. Francis J. Fadden jr., wore a gown of candlelight satin made on princess lines with long tight sleeves and a fan-shaped train. The marquisette yoke was trimmed with a deep bertha of rose point duchess lace in an off-the-shoulder effect and embroidered in seed pearls. Her tulle veil was held by a coronet of rose point duchess lace and orange blossoms, and a short veil covered her face during the ceremony. She carried a prayer book, bound in mother-of-pearl, the gift of the bridegroom, and a shower marker of butterfly orchids and bouvardia.

Miss Helen Jeannette Fadden, her sister's maid of honor, wore a gold lame gown with long tight sleeves and a short train. Her headdress was of baby ostrich plumes in matching shade from which fell a waist-length tulle veil. She carried a cascade bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Mrs. Clarence Joseph Boudreau who was matron of honor wore an ice blue gown made like that of the maid of honor with similar headdress, and the maid of honor, Miss Jane Massey of Long Island, was also in ice blue with matching headdress.

Chester John McGuire was his brother's best man and the ushers included Comdr. Harold M. Briggs, USN; Comdr. Thomas W. White, USNR; Lieut. Jesse Ebardt, USNR; Lieut. William A. Spear, USNR; Lieut. Frank M. McDonald, USNR; and Lieut. James J. McTight, USNR. The group, following Navy tradition, formed an arch of swords for the bridal couple as they left the church.

A large reception and wedding breakfast was held in the Chinese Room at the Mayflower following the ceremony. Mrs. Fadden, the bride's mother, and Mr. and Mrs. John McGuire, parents of the bridegroom, assisted in receiving. The wedding cake was cut by the bride with her husband's sword.

When Lieutenant McGuire and his bride left on a wedding trip Mrs. McGuire wore a brass-colored crepe gown, a beaver coat and a brown felt beret covered with yellow and brown feathers.

The bride received her education at George Washington University and the Washington College of Law from which she received her bachelor of laws degree. She is a cousin of the late Martin H. Glynn, former Governor of New York and member of Congress. On her paternal side she is also a cousin of William Arthur Fadden, former Prime Minister of Australia.

Lieutenant McGuire is a graduate of Boston University where he received his degree of bachelor of business administration and the Georgetown University Law School with a bachelor of law degree.

...UNTIL I'VE CHECKED THE ALIBI OF YOUR CO-SUSPECT OVER THERE!

THE UNITED STATES TREASURY

INVITES YOU TO VIEW THE HECHT CO.'S

CHRISTMAS WAR BOND WINDOWS

DEPICTING IN LIFE-LIKE DETAIL

"CHRISTMAS EVE WITH AMERICA'S FIGHTING FORCES"

ON THE FAR FLUNG BATTLEFRONTS OF THE WORLD

You are cordially invited to view this unusual Christmas display, which has been created and built by The Hecht Co. . . . under the direction of Victor Rinaldi . . . and dedicated to America's War Effort . . . and to the continued selling of War Savings Bonds and Stamps. See at first hand, in complete and life-like detail, how our fighting men will spend Christmas Eve throughout the world's battle-areas. Many of our boys will be on the firing line—many in fox-holes in the South Pacific . . . many in battered Sicilian villages . . . others may be afloat in life-rafts on the North Atlantic . . . still others in Japanese concentration camps. You'll see all this . . . and more . . . when you view The Hecht Co.'s War Bond Windows . . . now open for public view.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve on the North Atlantic"—A thrilling rescue of American fighting men, adrift in a life raft on the North Atlantic.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve in a Quonset Hut at Kiska"—How our boys in the Aleutians will celebrate the Christmas Eve of 1943 . . . in the ice and snow at Kiska.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve in a Battered Sicilian Village" — A bomb-wrecked church is the scene of an evening's prayer, conducted by a U. S. Army Chaplain.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve From the Top of the World"—A full-relief sculpture of the top of the globe . . . with American fighting men in action on every front.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve in a Jap Concentration Camp"—A group of courageous American airmen held prisoners behind barbed-wire in a detention camp somewhere in Japan.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve in a South Pacific Fox-hole"—Even in the jungle-swamps the boys take time out for a prayer and a thought of home on Christmas Eve.

SEE . . . "Christmas Eve at a North African Air Base"—The Christmas mail comes through on a transport plane for the soldiers, sailors, and paratroopers in Africa.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON

Mr. Charles B. Dulcan, Sr.
Vice President and General Manager
The Hecht Company
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Dulcan:

I welcome this opportunity to express my appreciation for the services performed on behalf of the War Bond Program by your organization. The Hecht Co., through its splendid War Bonds sales record, its patriotic presentation of the "Four Freedoms" display and now its graphic Christmas War Bond windows, has blazed a retail advertising and sales path of which you may well be proud.

In so doing, you have helped set the tone for the nation's advertising—to remind us all of the ideals for which our men are fighting and dying, and so arouse us to greater sacrifices on the home front.

Sincerely,

Ted R. Gamble
